Some of our dioceses are impossible of administration by one bishop if we are to continue to demand frequent visitation of the bishop for confirmation. Take a diocese such as Tennessee. It is not very large when the total number of parishes and missions is counted, but the distances are tremendous. It is six hundred miles from the cathedral of the diocese to the northeastern parishes. Frequent visitation can only be accomplished by a tremendous wear and tear on the physical vitality of the bishop. And yet. should the bishop be fairly young, the diocese would not want a coadjutor, and suffragans have not proved successful in the American scheme of things. Virginia is practically an impossible diocese for one man to administer as the people demand he should. Almost three hundred separate places for Episcopal visitation is a task no man would care to face alone, and distances are not easy. Some of our small western dioceses are very large when one man is expected to cover the whole field. So there is the strange situation of good church people refusing to consider too many bishops and yet demanding more than a limited number of bishops can accomplish. The Methodists and Roman Catholics are far more charitable in the demands made upon episcopal visitation.

We know one bishop who says he will never consent to the election of a coadjutor for any bishop who is less than fifty-five years of age. His theory is that a younger man would necessarily be the coadjutor and that his career would be undeveloped. He points out many bishops of the Church who were rectors of real ability but who, through years of being another's assistant, have grown listless and lazy in an office in which they felt doomed to years of following entirely the program that belonged to another man.

Another problem that it is well for church people to consider is the overworking of leadership, particularly when that leadership is displayed in young bishops. We have a case in point at present. The talented and attractive Bishop of Southern Ohio is put on every program we read about. There is no question about either his ability, his strength or his fine leadership. But the Church as a whole is doing its best to make him into an old man burnt out with overwork. Bishop Sherrill of Massachusetts is another example of the same thing. We might learn that a little conservation of talent would be a beneficial thing to the Church in the long run. Leadership of this type is too rare and needed to waste.

We really have little to offer as a solution to the various problems we have raised. We think we might take bishops a bit more for granted than we do and demand less of them. They are not, usually, our best preachers, so we might let them remain administrators and use priests as special orators and Lenten preachers. Bishops are not so changed by consecration that they cannot go back to parish work when they demonstrate their talents lie in that field. In fact, they are really just good men of whom others demand just a little too much.

The Near East Foundation.

The Near East Foundation is in the vanguard of American organizations that recognize a changing order in the countries of the East. New racial and national vigor, a post-war reaction, requires an appreciation of rekindled self-respect among people whose development has been retarded through centuries of neglect. In striving to help our neighbors across the sea we can no longer do it in the way of giving alms. The new nationalism which is sweeping the world resents the offense to its dignity and self-respect implied in charity. A program to be effective must be based upon the knowledge of the national temperament, it must utilize native resources, and it must be simple and inexpensive so that it can be kept within the scope of the people of the poor and struggling countries where the service is being rendered. Above all it must promote peace, for only with peace can there be progress.

These are the ideals upon which the work of the Near East Foundation is based.

The work is of especial interest to church people as it is a constructive program maintained in the lands that are the birthplace of the three great religions of modern times, and the hallowed traditions of Christianity are embodied in all of its thirty-odd projects for the betterment of mankind.

It is these Christian principles that are today being demonstrated by this American organization in Bible Lands. Since 1930, when it was organized to succeed the Near East Relief, it has been quietly and unobtrusively working among the thirty-three millions of people in the drab and desolate villages forgotten for centuries while the rest of the world progressed. The Near East Foundation is bringing to them the good tidings of a fuller life by teaching them: To feed themselves from the produce of their own soil; to fight disease with their own resources; to cleanse their villages and their homes, and to raise the status of their women and children. Above all, it is teaching them to develop an interpretation of Christ's teachings that satisfies their intuitions and their yearnings. Essentially it is a program of international neighborliness that promotes peace. Wars grow from restlessness and frustration. Where there is contentment there is no war, and in spite of the rumors of war seething all about them, there is a valiant attempt in the countries of the Near East to maintain amity one with another, and of the vital influences in this situation, is the presence of the Near East Foundation and its workers expressing American friendship in good works.

Moreover, Whittier, in his "Barbara Frietchie," celebrating an "incident" which never took place, slandered the earnest Christian, Stonewall Jackson, by ascribing a "flush of shame" to the man whom friend and fair-minded foe alike, praise as the soul of honor. And, by the way, that Bible which is supposed to have inspired such Imperialistic Quakers as Whittier, in no place proclaims such a penalty against slaveholders (such as, for example, Washington, Jefferson, Patrick Henry, Davis, Lee and Jackson), as it does proclaim against those who perpetrate the "offense" of war.

Medical Work Among Igorots.

Mr. Editor:

In your issue of October 26, 1935, page 13, there is a news item from our mission at Sagada, Philippine Islands, which states that Dr. Anderson will be the first woman physician ever to work among the Igorots.

Igorot is a general designation of any or all of the wild tribes of the Philippines, on any or all of their 3,000 islands. Physicians have always been scarce out there, and it has been a custom, especially at Sagada, to grab any that came in range and use him as long as they could. One of the best we ever had was a Jew. It is possible that at some time on one or another of the islands, some woman physician may have done some temporary work.

As to the question of "what the natives will make of such a phenomenon", there should be an answer in the Spirit of Missions, about 1914, in its series, "Lives That Have Helped". Under the record of Fr. Staunton, there was an account of a very remarkable clinic at Sagada conducted by Mrs. Staunton. She was not a physician, technically speaking. But she was a very skilled trained nurse, and a very wise healer of the sick. For many years there was no physician at Sagada. But the sick folk showed up every day—from ten to fifty or more. One of the priests of the mission was ostensibly in charge of this clinic, and he and his helpers washed wounds and applied iodine or ointments, or administered quinine or castor oil or cough drops, or boric acid or argyrol for sore eyes. But if the patient had any serious ailment, to Mrs. Staunton he went, post haste. Twenty years and more those natives trusted their lives implicitly to that noble woman. Dr. Anderson will find that ground well prepared.

The Real Nature of the Huguenot Evangelical Society.

Mr. Editor:

I would greatly appreciate your kindness in bringing to the notice of your readers the following regarding the real nature of the Huguenot Society:

This society has been often confused with those of a genealogical character. It is purely missionary in its object, which is to pay as much as possible of the little salary of a pastor of the French Protestant Church working in a large Home Mission field among the poor and uninstructed.

All persons desirous of helping in such work are welcomed as members of the society, not only those who are of Huguenot descent. For about thirty-three years this aid has gone from American to French Protestants, and greatly is it appreciated, both as Christian succour and as international friendliness, but new members are desperately needed now to keep our pastor, Rev. R. Durant, in Paris, from want.

The inspirational meeting of the society takes place in January next.

The annual meeting of the Huguenot Evangelical Society was held October 25 and the following officers elected:

President, Rev. William E. Hill, D. D.; Chairman Executive Committee, Miss Kate Meade; First Vice-Chairman, Mrs. Burnett Lewis; Second Vice-Chairman, Mrs. J. Fenton Taylor; Recording Secretary, Miss Emily Waddill; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Ellen C. Blair; Treasurer, Mrs. J. B. Halyburton, 1628 Park Avenue, Richmond, Va.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

"A Little One Shall Become a Thousand"

(Is. 60:22).

January 1, 1917, in my diary, I find the words:—"Desire to be 1,000 times more useful than ever before." This is the first hint that I have been able to find of the presence in my mind, of the thousandfold idea, and I must have begun praying about this time, to be made a thousandfold more useful. The shadow of the Great War had made me wonder what could be done to prepare the way for creating a better order of things after the war was over. To pray to be made a thousandfold more useful, seemed to me to be the best way to prepare myself to do my part; to make my contribution, however small, in helping the Church to bring in a New Day. It was my custom, at noon every day, to go up to the Church, close to my home, ring the bell, and pray for missions. I also prayed to be made more useful. It was a solitary prayer service but some were reminded by the sound of the bell, to pray in their own homes. Time passed on, and nothing seemed to happen to show that my prayer for greatly increased usefulness was being answered, though I made two successive ventures, which seemed to provide opportunities for greater things, but they came to nothing.

How the Answer Came.

Then, after nearly two and a half years, something did happen, which at the time, seemed a small incident, but which has had wonderful results. One day in May, 1919, while I was kneeling in the chancel of the Church, I heard the main door open, followed by the pattering of little feet up the aisle. Soon I found my little girl, four and a half years old, kneeling close beside me, and what is more, she had brought her doll, and had made it kneel, too. She had evidently been impressed with the fact that I needed help, and was doing her best to supply the need. Day after day the child came, of her own accord, though the doll soon ceased coming. I taught her to join with me in praying for missions and pronouncing a blessing upon those for whom we had prayed. In writing an article for our paper, describing our work in the mountains of Virginia, I wrote an account of the incident above described, under the heading, "The House of God and the Child." In a very short time I received a letter from a lady, saying that this story ought to go to the ends of the earth, which was prophetic of what soon followed.

How the Story Spread.

That summer I received a letter from the Church Missions House, in New York, asking for some stories about the Mountain Work, as they wished to use them in the Nation-Wide Campaign, which was then being planned. So among others I sent the story of the child and the doll. I heard nothing more, till one day, two or three months later, when I was taking a funeral, an old gentleman said to me:—"I saw about you and your little girl in the Christian Herald." A few days later I came across a copy and found in prominent type the heading:—"'Man and Child pray for the World." Beneath was an account of the incident, with a picture of myself with the child in my lap. This was soon followed by the receipt of a number of letters from different parts of the country, expressing great interest and in some cases asking for our prayers. Then came a request from the Church Missions House, for a picture of the child, which when sent, was reproduced in large numbers and distributed throughout the Church, with the story of the doll.

Other Remarkable Incidents.

There were some other remarkable incidents which happened that same fall, which, with what has been already mentioned, convinced me that God was really answering my prayer to be made a thousandfold more useful. Two of these were (1) the acceptance of a Hymn which I wrote for the Nation-Wide Campaign, as the Campaign Hymn, which was sung at a joint meeting of the House of Bishops and the House of Deputies, at the General Convention in Detroit (1919). (2) My Church at Ivy was the first to go over the top in the Nation-Wide Campaign, in the Diocese of Virginia, and probably in the whole country. It seemed to me that if I could interest others in joining with me in seeking to be made a thousandfold more useful, it might be a great help to the Church in making Christianity a greater power in the world than it had been for a long time. January 1, 1920, I preached in St. Paul's, Ivy, on the text:—"A little one shall become a thousand," and launched the Order of the Thousandfold, three years to a day after the first mention of the Thousandfold idea in my diary. In the nearly sixteen years since the Order was started, it has made wonderful progress.

The Order Made Known to the World.

In November, 1920, there appeared in the Christian Herald, an article on the Order, by Miss Margaret Sangster, on the editorial staff, with a picture of the scene in the Church, with the child and the doll kneeling. Strangely enough the paper was dated November 6, which happened to be the child's sixth birthday. As the Christian Herald goes to almost every country in the world, the Order could not have been given wide publicity. A few months later the same weekly appeared with a colored reproduction of the scene in the Church on the outside cover with the Thousandfold Prayer underneath. During the Bishop's Crusade, the Thousandfold Prayer was distributed throughout the Church, in a Prayer Leaflet, with the suggestion that the prayer should be used in the homes of our people. This year the prayer has been circulated again throughout the Church by the Forward Movement, in the booklets. Follow On, and Forward Day by Day (Trinity Season). It would be impossible to tell the full story of this Movement, with the very many interesting incidents connected with it, as it would take a book to do so. Quite apart form the free publicity given it by the Church and religious papers, an immense amount of personal work has been done by individual members of the Order, whose loyal cooperation is hereby gratefully acknowledged.

This is written on the twenty-first birthday of the little girl, without whose help and inspiration the Or-

Our Church in China

By HUNSDON CARY, JR.,

Student, Theological Seminary, Virginia.

MANY YEARS AGO, a famous man stood upon a famous mountain in China, and uttered five words which the Chinese have never forgotten. Confucius it was who stood upon the lofty heights of Tai Shan, one of the five sacred mountains of China and said, "The World is very small."

Having just returned from China, I feel very much the same way—the world is not so big. Geographically, yes. But in heart and mind, China seems very close to me; and it is that nearness and warmth which I feel for China that I want to try to impart—be it only in some small degree. I cannot write with authority about the Chinese, for what I know is small indeed in comparison with the knowledge of those many Christians who have given their lives to help that great and struggling country. My sole aim is to present China as I saw it, and, in particular, to draw from you a more sympathetic understanding of the work of the Christian Church, and especially the Episcopal Church, in her work among the people of that country. It is my firm belief that the fully developed Christian must have a knowledge and sympathetic understanding of the work in our mission fields.

Division of the Mission Work.

Roughly speaking, the mission work of the Christian Church in China is threefold: religious, medical, and educational.

First, let me give you a few personal glimpses of the religious work being done in China today. The Episcopal Church, scattered along a far-flung battle line, is at work in fifteen of the eighteen provinces of China. Under the guidance of American, Anglican, and Chinese, the whole Church—layman, priest, and bishop—is definitely moving ahead.

By no means is the work of the Church fashioned in the same mold in each of the various sections. Hardly any two parishes are alike—each presents special problems—and the method of the minister in one may be futile in another. For example, the work of Mr. Cameron McRae in Shanghai is far different from that of Mr. Edward Dyer, in Wusih. Again, the work of these two is different from that of Mr. Francis Cox, in Soochow.

In Wusih, Mr. Dyer has a fine modern church, and a Chinese minister as his assistant. The rich silk mill owners and coolies who work for them come to this church. But, more than this, the clergy of this church have the responsibility of minsitering to the needs of the rural folk who live within a radius of ten miles of the city. "What a small radius!" you may say. But first, go with me on a trip to one of these out-stations. We are up at six on Sunday morning, out of the house by seven, and we travel by rickshaw to one of the many canals which form a vast network for transportation and irrigation in southern China. Then we go eight miles by canal junk, and by eleven o'clock we arrive at a small village—our mission out-station. Preparations for the service are made and the service itself is held in the one room of an old ancestral hall. The congregation sits on wooden benches—the men on the right and the women on the left of the aisle. We notice a crude altar and even cruder altar rail. A short service and sermon spoken in Chinese, and last—but most thrilling of all—the Communion Service. I attended such a service this summer, and while I could not understand a word of it, it was the richest service, I have ever attended. I felt for the first time, as I knelt beside those humble Chinese farmers, the deep meaning of those words, "If ye have done it unto the least of one of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." From that time forward I had a deper sympathy for China. They were, in truth, my "brethren."

Or again, go with me to Shanghai and see there the work of one man—Mr. Cameron McRae. During the past few years he has started two Episcopal Churches, led them to a point where they are self-supporting, and placed them under the charge of Chinese ministers. On top of all of this, he is chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital.

Mr. Francis Cox of Soochow has recently been made archdeacon of the work there. These churches are, for the most part, under Chinese ministers, but he supervises them all. This is a good example of the supervision of the native clergy by the foreign missionary.

BEFORE WE PASS on to the next step, let us remember that figures concerning China look discouraging on paper. Today only one-half of one per cent of China is nominally Christian. But also let us remember that it took six years, after the first missionaries went out, before a single conversion was made. We cannot compare their statistics with our own. Furthermore, we must take courage from this fact:—It has been estimated that it takes approximately four hundred years for a church to become self-propagating in any country.

Wherever the minister has made his greatest strides, the doctor has been close beside him. To make Christianity more vital, the missionary has realized that often the body must be clothed before the spirit can be warmed. Missionary hospitals are well established in China, and few cities of any size are at any great distance from the Christian doctor. I can think of no greater piece of missionary work in China today than such medical work as that being done by men like Dr. Claude Lee at St. Andrew's Hospital in Wusih, or Dr. Augustine Tucker at St. Luke's Hospital in Shanghai. These two men represent the best in our medical missions. Dr. Tucker heads a clinical staff of eighteen American and Chinese doctors and a graduate nursing staff of eighteen American and Chinese women. This hospital is probably our biggest hospital in China today, and, as such, it ministers to people of every walk of life. And let us remember that many patients who came to this huge hospital in Shanghai have never heard the name of Jesus Christ. The vast majority are not converted, but here and there someone is touched and converted by the evangelist he hears or the Christian literature he reads.

St. Andrew's Hospital in Wusih provides the only modern medical work in a city of nearly 300,000 people. It was started by Dr. Lee in 1908, and it has since grown from one smal dispensary building to a completely modern institution of 100 beds. Two American graduate nurses are in charge of a nursing school of approximately twenty-five Chinese student nurses and fifteen graduate nurses. The total list of employees numbers almost 100 men and women. To this hospital come men, women, and children of every class—rich factory owners, bankers, rickshaw coolies, beggars, waifs, and farmers. They come not by ambulance or motor car, but by rickshaw and canal boat—some even on foot. And what a varied cross section of life they present! And what a variety of diseases!—Typhoid, malaria, cholera, small-pox, tuberculosis, and many dread Oriental diseases—not to mention broken limbs, pneumonia, asthma, appendicitis, and many other ailments well known to us at home. To this medical haven they come—some for only a few days, others for weeks and months. Not only are many bodies healed, but some become Christians. At least sixty per cent of the nurses become confirmed into the Episcopal Church before they leave; chapel services are held every morning before ward rounds are made. Truly, the medical missionary is not behind the minister in spreading the Christian message in this world of poverty, disease, ignorance, and superstition.

But we must go on. The work of the school and college has been of paramount importance to China. Today, the greatest university in China is probably St. John's University in Shanghai. It started as a small day school, almost one hundred years ago, and it has grown to include almost every department known to American universities—medicine, liberal arts, engineering, law, etc. But there are many similar universities. Among them are Yenching in Peking, Central China College in Nanking, and the Methodist College in Soochow. Practically every church mission has a day school for boys and girls, and some of these are very large. It is not too much to say that modern education in China today is due almost entirely to the Christian missionary zeal. No one can place too much emphasis on this phase of our mission work. We must take people where we find them and, if they are ignorant and superstitious, as they often are in China, we must first educate them in the bare fundamentals of life before we can hope to make Christian men and women of them. China owes much to her Christian hospital and school. I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that without the school and hospital, the Christian Church could never have made headway in China.

Future Outlook for Missions in China.

To discuss missions as they are today is not enough. In the final analysis, we must look to the future. One question frequently asked is: "What would happen to China's missions if the foreign missionary pulled out?" The vast majority of the people in China will tell you that it would be disastrous—their reasons being that the Chinese clergy are lacking in initiative. They are good men in a self-supporting Church, but when they are put on their own in a pioneering or undeveloped mission, it is revealed that they have not yet learned the technique which would enable them to make the grade. Christianity is undoubtedly making daily inroads in China, but I think it logical to say that, in a country where only one-half of one per cent is nominally Christian, we cannot expect the work to continue long under Chinese leadership alone. China sees this as well as we. Though only a small percentage of her 450,000,000 people are Christians, the Chinese are gradually losing faith in their old religions. Progress is being made and the powers of the Light are moving into areas of darkness. China is nearer unification than ever before. Civil motor roads are being constructed rapidly, distances are being made shorter, and ideas are penetrating into the interior. Moreover, China today is alert to the necessity of Salvation.

The Church, the hospital, and the school have shown, not the power of materialism, but the infinite greatness of the Spirit. Life is quickening in many places, and here and there the towering head of a native genius lifts itself above the masses. Such a one is Dr. Francis Wei, President of Central China College, in Nanking—a man stamped as one of the greatest of intellects in the world today. Men like Dr. Wei, and other lesser lights, are growing more numerous each year. The missionary has blazed the trail, and China, in turn, is being aroused by a handful of her own leaders to seek the Way, the Truth, and the Life. To such men, China's destiny is entrusted—men "whose roots are firmly in the past, but whose rich flowering is in the present." But it is important to remember that these men are only a handful at present. They cannot fight the battle alone. They need our help for many years to come, and, if we fail them now, past efforts will prove but little. The major struggle has not passed—it lies ahead.

"No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." We have put our hands to the plow in China. We cannot look back—a rich harvest awaits the Kingdom if we carry on.

BOOK REVIEWS

SCHOOLHOUSE IN THE FOOTHILLS: By Ella Enslow, in collaboration with Alvin F. Harlow. Published at $2.00 by Simon and Schuster, Inc., 386 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

"No personal narrative published this year has excelled 'Schoolhouse in the Foothills,' for sheer human interest" Reader's Digest for October.

This book gives an account of the experiences of a young teacher who, when asked to do so, willingly took charge of a school in a Mountain Hollow in the Tennessee foothills and made a glorious success out of what had been apparent failure. The story is indeed full of "human interest" as it reveals the terribly neglected condition of the people in the community which she helped to redeem. It also reveals the heroic quality of the young teacher in overcoming difficulties, which, to many, would seem almost insurmountable. She showed herself more than a match for a young bully by the sheer force of her personality in making him submit to a thrashing at her hands, although he was fully grown and perfectly able to have turned the tables on her.

The one-room school was soon outgrown and before long she had two assistant teachers assigned to her with two extra rooms added to the building. The story shows clearly what a great amount of good can be done by one individual inspired by the spirit of service and with the intelligence to use his or her talents in redeeming a neglected community, in the mountains or elsewhere.

One's only regret is that the book ends with the young teacher in a hospital suffering from the strain she had been under for several years in giving herself and all that she had physically and mentally and spiritually, towards redeeming a backward community.

COOPERATION AND THE WORLD MISSION: By John R. Mott. Cloth. Pp. 79. Published by the International Missionary Council, New York City. Price $1.00.

Dr. Mott, Chairman of the International Missionary Council, has written on a timely subject. The concise volume is based on studies of actual cooperations made during his world-wide travels. It reflects views of eminent men of many nations, races and communions. From these sources he points out the reasons for successful cooperations, and why others fail. The author is interested in cooperation among Christians rather than in organic unity of the Churches. He believes that Jesus Christ wills that we work together in carrying out his world mission in the spirit of the prayer that we may be one and that the world may believe. Only through cooperation can such opponents to Christian character as materialism, secularism, evils of the moving pictures, and the unchristian aspects of the present economic situation be combatted. In regard to the planning of the missionary program, he says it is an "idle dream" to assume the "waiting task can be performed with divided ranks". This is a thoughtful and worthwhile book.

Old Hungars Day

By JOHN CURTIN RUNKLE,

Rector of Hungars Parish, Bridgetown, Virginia.

Hain't you never been down on de East'n Sho',
De lan' whar de tides rise so slow;
Whar de sea and de old Chesapeake almost meet,
And brek into foam at your feet?
You ain't never been dar, you say?
Um-m-m—
Well, I sho' is sorry fer you.
(Wise, Historical Sketch).

SUCH is the love, good and wholesome, of the Eastern Shoreman for this strip of land in the sea on which he lives, the two small counties, Accomac and Northampton, toward the point of the Chesapeake peninsula belonging to the State of Virginia. It is the east shore of the Chesapeake Bay and we are told that the term "Eastern Shore" is frequently found in the records of the Jamestown colony.

In Harper's Magazine of 1879 there appeared an article entitled "The Peninsular Canaan." In it the Eastern Shore was described as a veritable land of Canaan, because of its fertility by land and by sea, its pleasant countryside lying blinking in the sun, with its charming creeks and stately pine trees, quite oblivious to the whirl of modern life about it. It was also described as a land by itself, isolated and difficult of ingress and egress. Today it is still its fertile self; as our little verse so humorously puts it.

"Whar de lan' is so rich and de taters so fat,
Dat it's drippin' with fatness dey's at.
. . . Whar de wild ducks fly low,
Whar de oysters done grow as big as your han'!"

One of its orators speaking of the Eastern Shore said, "It is the index finger on the hand of Virginia, pointing to the sunny South." This is not only a nicely turned figure but a truism indeed. No longer does "de Sho" lie oblivious to the whirl of things about, for many are the travelers from the North who "know what dey's at" who, coming this way are daily cuting miles from their trip South and who are saying of the traffic of the cities from New York down, "I'll skip it," and on to the fine boats across the Chesapeake and so to the Southland. But still there are many things of old which make for the charm and lure of this kindly sea-washed shore.

Far back in the first quarter of the sixteenth century the leading powers of Europe, indulging a proclivity which they evidently still relish, judging from recent adventures in Africa, investigated the shore of the savage land, America, with a view to garnering the spoil. One Verrazano, sent by the king of France for that purpose, after touching the shores of North Carolina, landed on the Eastern Shore of Virginia in 1524. Whether he was unimpressed we cannot say, but he stayed only a few days. Later Captain John Smith, the Englishman, appeared in our picture; he did a better job for his king, for he stayed a while and drove some stakes and His Majesty was the gainer.

The year 1614 marks the first real settlement of the white man on this shore, for in that year on Smith's Island a group settled for the purpose of making salt for the Jamestown Colony. They were maintained, however, by that colony and the settlement was not permanent. One frequently sees in the homes here a picture of the marriage of John Rolfe and Pocahontas and the good folk point out an interested witness, one Thomas Savage. He it is who is said to have been the first permanent settler, having come to America when he was thirteen years old. He was traded to the Indians with whom he became very friendly, and in 1619 was given by them a large tract of land lying between Cherrystone and King's Creeks. Within ten years, settlements on the Shore grew rapidly and Henry A. Wise, in his "Historical Sketch," tells us that "cut off as they were from the mother colony, the Eastern Shore people suffered many inconveniences, because they had no court. Poor people who could ill afford the expense of a trip across the bay had no redress. To offset this a monthly court was established at Accomac in 1632."

THIS, it is hoped, will give some notion of how our story began. At a place called Bridgetown on lovely "Hungars Creek" (the name Hungars is generally thought to have come from England) stands Old Hungars, one of the oldest churches in the Episcopal communion in the United States. There is, however, quite a period of introduction to her story which we must first consider.

When the charter was granted the Virginia Company in 1606, the king instructed his adventurous subjects "that all persons should kindly treat the savage and heathen people in those parts and use all proper means to draw them to the true service and knowledge of God." Give them God, but take their land was the order of the day—a rather interesting contemplation even now. According to Jennings Cropper Wise, in "Eastern Shore of Virginia History," when the first church was built on the Eastern Shore is not known, but it seems certain the Rev. Robert Bolton was assigned to the Shore in 1623. Knowing the religious habits of the first settlers, as a former historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia has said, "They must have had something that passed for a church under the law of the Colonies. Certainly regular services must have been held." Yet we are told that there is no mention of a church in the census of 1620, nor of 1624. In the article on Northampton Churches in "Colonial Churches," the first church is said to have been built "neare the ffishing poynte," probably at the point made by the junction of Cherrystone and King's Creeks.

A fact of more than passing interest in our story is that in Hungars Parish, at the courthouse in Eastville, are kept the oldest continuous records in the United States. From these records within the first few pages is established the fact that the Church was organized on the Eastern Shore, as Frances Lankford Taylor, in her sketch points out, as early as 1631:— "A court held at Accowmacke 7th day of January, 1632, it is ordered by this Court that the new Church Wardens shall have power to distrayne of all such inhabitants that have not yet paid their duties of corn and tobacco unto the minister according to an act dated the 4th. day of September, 1631, and that the said Church Wardens distrayne the said goods and chattels until satisfaction be made according to the terms and intent of the said act."

A second church was built, we are told, near Arlington, known as the Magothy Bay Church, tradition says in 1634. A court order of 1645 required all citizens to carry "arms and fixed ammunition" and as a penalty for failing to do so were required "to clear the paths to the New Church." Quoting from Miss Taylor's sketch, "The adjective 'new' proves nothing, for it may have been a replacement of a temporary structure or a new site. . . . Let it be as it may, Magothy Bay Church played a prominent part in the history of Ye Little Kingdom of Accomack." The will of John Stringer written in 1688 and recorded in 1689 in Northampton Records states "It is my further will and desire that my executor out of my said estate do pay and deliver a hundred pounds of tobacco (when the new church is built and finished for the lower parish of Northampton County and for and towards ye purchasinge of the Lord's Prayer and Ten Commandments to be set up in the same)" One could hardly doubt that this is in reference to the Magothy Bay Church, for it was known as the "lower church." In 1741, the Hon. John Custis, Esq. gave to the "Lower Church of Hungars Parish" a chalice which is now used in Christ Church, a daughter of Old Hungars, in Eastville.

So runs the tale of the old Magothy Church, the foundations of which may still be seen by those who travel to Arlington. The traveler while there may also see on the tomb of the Hon. John Custis, Esq., just mentioned, whose matrimonial venture seems not to have been the smoothest, the following gentle tribute to his wife, "aged 71 years and yet lived but seven years," which was the space of time he kept a Bachelor's House at Arlington on the Eastern Shore of Virginia. Mrs. Custis is said to have died seven years before her husband. The story goes that he left orders to be buried standing up and that his orders were carried out. It is more than a little interesting to note that the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Custis, Daniel Parke Custis, married Martha Dandridge, who as the widow Custis married George Washington.

SO MUCH for the beginning of the Church on the Eastern Shore and now for the story of Old Hungars Church herself. In that delectable book, "Old Families and Churches of Virginia" by Bishop Meade, we are told that "Northampton was originally called by the old Indian name Achowmake or Accowmake. In the year 1642, the name was changed from Accowmake to Northton or Northampton, the name of a county in England . . . In that same year, 1642, the parish was divided, all below King's Creek to Smith's Island being one parish, afterward called Hungars Parish, and all from King's Creek to Nuswattock Creek being the other and called Nuswattocks or Nassawattocks Church or Parish." We get some picture of the discipline of the church and state in those days from the following from the same book, "In the year 1643 the court inflicted punishment" on a person for an infringement of the law, "ordering that at the next sermon preached at Nassawattocks, he shall stand, during the Lessons, at the church door with a paper on his hat on which shall be written 'Inimicus Libellus' and that he shall ask forgiveness of God. . . ." Also, "In the year 1647, Mr. Palmer being minister at Nassawattocks, the Church Wardens presented two persons to the court which ordered them to stand in the church during the service with white sheets on their shoulders and white wands in their hands." The ones charged with the discipline of the flock in those days evidently believed in the efficacy of enacted parables. Does not all of this point to some building used as a church by 1643 in the Nassawattacks section—the first Hungars Church?

In the article referred to above in "Colonial Churches," we have the following, "In or about the year 1653, Col. Stephen Charlton, a wealthy and very prominent citizen, bequeathed his home-place (situated in Church Neck, at no great distance from Hungars church) to his daughter, . . . for her life, and to her heirs; but if she had no child, then the land was to go to the church wardens, . . . and to the vestry of Hungars Parish for the support of a rector. It was stipulated that the church was to be open for divine service a certain number of times in every year. The daughter married, but had no child; at her death the parish inherited it. It became the home of many successive rectors." Glebe lands reverted to the State of Virginia, but this land having been given by a private individual raised a question. Miss Taylor tells us that the overseers of the poor sold it conditionally and after considerable litigation, much feeling being aroused in the community, somewhere between 1843 and 1850, "the church was dispossessed of the property."

THERE is a record in Northampton of a deed dated December 23, 1684, in which Major William Spencer gave to the Church Wardens of Hungars Parish the land on Hungars Creek, "on which," in the words of the deed, "the frame of a church now stands, with one acre of land surrounding it being part of Smith's Field." The expression, "the frame of a church now stands," might mean the beginnings of a new church building but Jennings C. Wise in his Eastern Shore, Virginia History, says it was "a skeleton of a church and the parish of Nassawattocks was practically defunct; the people of the upper peninsula attending St. George's at Pungoteague . . ."

At a Council held at James City, April 21, 1691, the parishes, Hungars and Nassawattocks, were merged into Hungars Parish on a petition made to the court on the ground that the people were "unable singly or combined to give such support as would secure an able divine and build a good church."

In the courthouse at Eastville, there is an important record for our story, the deed of Thomas Preeson of Northampton County dated May 14, 1752, in which he gave to the then wardens of Hungars Parish "for and in consideration of a pew in the brick church called Hungars Parish . . . marked T. P. 1751 . . . . one acre of land situate, lying and being in the aforesaid county of Northampton whereon Hungars Church now doth stand and adjoining to an acre of land formerly given by William Spencer, late of the said county, deceased, which two acres are bounded Easterly by a line of sycamore trees, sixteen Poles, etc." Although there has been a considerable body of opinion among historians that the present brick church at Hungars was built shortly after the merger of parishes in 1691 (opinion probably based in large measure upon the expression "build a good church" in the above-mentioned petition of that date), yet there has been no record nor evidence found between the court records of 1691 and 1751 to prove this assumption. The chalice which is used today by the communicants of Hungars has upon it this inscription, "The gift of the Hon. John Custis, Esq., of Williamsburgh to the upper Church of Hungars Parish in Northampton County, 1742." The "upper Church" was the Hungars Church. There is kept in the "old Clerk's office" in Eastville an altar cloth upon which is worked in eyelet needlework the date "1749" and written in ink across the top of the embroidered date is "Hungars Church 1749." That a Hungars Church was active during this period cannot well be questioned, but these things do not prove the existence at that time of the present building. That the present brick church, a picture of which is on the cover page, was an actuality in 1751, is established with certainty by the deed of Thomas Preeson. Although interesting suppositions, supported by good arguments, in favor of an earlier date may be adduced, the State of Virginia has accepted this date, 1751, as the time of building. The record establishing it for this sketch was obtained through the courtesy of Mr. Dunton Fatherly of Eastville. Let us remember that this refers to the present building; Hungars Church is much older.

Putting our pieces together now, Old Hungars story begins by 1643. The year 1653 marks the bequest to her of a fine glebe and the record definitely points to her standing on her present ground before 1684 and that she has stood there and as she stands today, with a slight reduction in size, since 1751. It is a venerable story as she has functioned through the years. Long has she lived proclaiming the message of Christ; long may she live to proclaim it.

Of course there are many tales of interest about the old place, a few of which may just be mentioned in passing; we are told of the ancient and colorful hangings said to have been given by Queen Anne and to have been strikingly beautiful, of a fine organ which was "entirely broken up by ruthless hands, the leaden parts used for sacrilegious purposes," they say by fishermen as sinkers for their nets, of the repair work done about 1850, when the building was reduced about twenty feet in size, of the use of the church by soldiers for a stable, of interesting names connected with its life . . . . but we must go on. The purpose of this article is to recall to the Church one of the points of its beginnings in this country and to tell Old Hungars' friends as well as those who know her not, of the Hungars' Day celebration at this old shrine on Sunday, November 24. On the afternoon of that day Bishop Thomson will officiate and an endeavor will be made to form an association on the Eastern Shore for the preservation of the old churches here and through them to keep before the eyes of the Church at large our continuity with the past. Of course it is hoped that the friends and children of Old Hungars will join us in this service in which we remember her past and plan for her future. The service will begin at 2:30 P. M.

Services are held every Sunday at Hungars. There is a small but devoted group of people who are keeping her doors open and whose unswerving loyalty is worthy indeed of high praise. A class will be presented there for confirmation on November 24; there is life in Hungars and we pray that her light will never fail. Let us, again in the words of our little verse, extend to all our invitation to the coming celebration:

Hain't you never been down on de East'n Sho',
Whar de days go by in a glow?
Whar life is de best and de most like a song,
An' it seem dar's no need to do wrong?
You ain't never been dar, you say?
Den go—
So I won't haf to feel sorry for you.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE.

der of the Thousandfold would probably never have come into existence.

And thus the answer came at last,
For usefulness a thousandfold,
And who can tell all that befell
From that one little deed of gold?
But God and His good angels know
How far the blessings still may go.

PIONEERING CHRISTIAN SERVICE IN BIBLE LANDS.

When John sent two disciples to inquire of Jesus, "Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another?" His answer was—

"Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see: "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have good tidings preached to them."

Near East Foundation

Is following the principles first demonstrated by Jesus in its work with the neglected rural peoples in Bible Lands.

It is helping them to help themselves to—Improve their living conditions

Prevent Disease
Increase their earning power
Lift the status of their women
Give opportunity to their children
Live a fuller life.

Special effort is being made at this Thanksgiving time to secure gifts which are greatly needed to carry on this Christian work.

Woman's Auxiliary Executive Board Works for Peace

The Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary calls attention to the Peaceways broadcast over the Columbia network Thursday nights at nine-thirty o'clock eastern time.

Publications recommended by the Board in connection with peace education for use in branches or, where possible, in public libraries, include the news bulletins of the National Y. W. C. A. (600 Lexington Avenue, New York), and of the National Council for the Prevention of War (Washington, D. C.), and the Headline Books of the Foreign Policy Association (8 West Fortieth Street, New York).

A leaflet on peace issued by the Board for use in connection with the Quiet Day of Prayer, was sent to every diocese and missionary district which ordered the Quiet Day leaflet.

Newly-elected officers of the Board are:

Chairman—Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, New York.

Vice-Chairman—Mrs. Julius E. McKinney, Denver, Colorado.

Recording Secretary—Miss Mary L. Pardee, New Haven, Connecticut.

New committee chairmen are: Citizenship, Mrs. Fred W. Thomas, Asheville, North Carolina; Field, Mrs. James R. Cain, Columbia, South Carolina; Finance, Mrs. H. G. Lucas, Brownwood, Texas; Personnel, Mrs. Robert G. Happ, South Bend, Indiana; United Thank Offering, Mrs. Paul H. Barbour, Mission, South Dakota; Program, Mrs. Beverly Ober, Washington, D. C. These officers and chairmen are elected for a term of one year, with the exception of that of the program committee, whose term is for two years.

How the Woman's Auxiliary Began and How it Developed.

An inquiry concerning the present work of the Woman's Auxiliary led to the thought of quoting from an article written for the Church Missionary Calendar by Miss Edna B. Beardsley, Educational Secretary. In it she deals with the growth and development of our missionary work from the first organized effort made by the Church in this country for the support of missions, to the place the organization occupies today as auxiliary to the whole of the Church's mission.

Miss Beardsley says in part:

"At the fourth General Convention in 1792 the struggling young Church appointed a committee to provide support for missionaries to preach the gospel on the frontier. In 1821 the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church was founded. Several auxiliary societies were formed at this time. In 1835 General Convention ruled that the Church herself was the missionary society. When the auxiliary societies were disbanded, fifty-seven were found to be composed of women and girls.

The Way It Began.

"In 1871 General Convention created a Woman's Auxiliary to the Board of Missions. Miss Mary A. Emery, later Mrs. Twing, was appointed to 'create a network of local societies, as widespread as the Church itself.' Miss Julia Emery, who followed her sister as Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, urged that the Auxiliary think of 'what is best for the work of the whole Church rather than what would most stimulate the interest of the Woman's Auxiliary.'

The Way It Developed.

"In 1916 a Committee on the Organization of the Auxiliary was appointed at the Triennial Meeting. In 1919 this committee presented a resolution to the Triennial Meeting, which suggested that the Woman's Auxiliary become auxiliary to the National Council if such an organization were formed. The Triennial Meeting approved this resolution, and in February, 1920, the newly-formed National Council recognized the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council in all its Departments."

Aims and Plans.

Miss Beardsley's brief resume of development brings the work to the extended line of action of today. This widened field and ever-widening outlook calls for the best the womanhood of the Church can give. And numbers of consecrated women are giving of their best. There are still many to follow, many for whom there must be found an effective means of reaching and bringing people into actual contact with some phase of the Church's work.

It is of incalculable value that so many and varied fields present opportunities, insuring an appeal from some kind of service to every member. Determining the type of work which will appeal to the individual, whether devotional, educational, social, financial, or whatever it may be, is of no small importance in attempting to enlist her interest.

Experience shows that to stimulate an active interest in a Churchwoman and be able to turn that interest into a program of intelligent service, means not only advancement of the definite work which she undertakes, but means also a blessing to her through her own spiritual culture.

And is this not one part of the work of the Woman's Auxiliary? Is it not an essential condition of success, to translate into accomplishment more of the potential power of the womanhood of the Church?

News Furnishes Helpful Suggestions.

These items are given for their news interest and for the helpful suggestions found in them. Our poor excuses shame us when we read how others overcome difficulties and surmount obstacles.

The Chinese President of the Woman's Guild in the parish at Yen-chow, North China, finds her small baby no inconvenience to her office. She just presides capably over the meetings with her baby in her arms.

From Bontoc, P. I., it is learned that many of the uneducated members of the Woman's Auxiliary have expressed a desire to learn prayers and songs in dialect, so an extra meeting is being held every month with the hope of being able to fill this need.

Nine new prayer groups are reported for the year by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of New York. It reports also, as steps in strengthening the devotional life, that an increasing number of its parish branches have had regular Corporate Communions, and all districts report additional Quiet Days. Quiet Hours, Retreats, and Hours of Intercession.

Among recent offerings received by the National Council treasurer are about $70.00 for the United Thank Offering from the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's Church, Rome, Italy.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT

REV. DR. AND MRS. ALEXANDER ZABRISKIE VISIT SOUTHERN BRAZIL BY PLANE.

Porto Alegre, Brazil.—Dr. and Mrs. Zabriskie coming to South America down the west coast, crossing the Andes by airplane and reaching Livramento by train from Montevideo, visited as many of the churches of this missionary district as their time permitted. They were met at Buenos Aires by the Rev. Martin S. Firth and at Livramento by the Rev. George U. Krischke. The Rev. Mr. Krischke accompanied them as interpreter through Livramento, Bage, Sao Gabriel and Santa Maria to Porto Alegre.

In Porto Alegre they were guests of Mr. and Mrs. David Driver, visited all the churches, either on Sundays or week-days, were tendered a reception given by the three parishes at Trinity Parish House and another by the Boy Scouts of the Southern Cross School. In all churches visited, Dr. Zabriskie delivered an inspiring message, such as our Brazilian congregations would have wished to receive from a visitor from the Mother Church. He also spoke to the clergy of Porto Alegre and the neighboring parishes and to the boys of the Southern Cross School.

They visited Pelotas, going by airplane and returning by steamer. Here they were able to see St. Margaret's School, the grounds and buildings of our future orphanage, the diocesan printing offices and the Church of the Redeemer.

Met by Bishop Thomas.

Dr. and Mrs. Zabriskie flew from Porto Alegre to Santos, where they were met by Bishop Thomas, who conducted them from August 2-15 on a visit to various points of interest, such as the famous snake farm at Butantan, the State Orchid Farm, orange and coffee plantation and many mission stations among both Brazilian and Japanese.

They spent a week at Rio de Janeiro visiting five of our churches, speaking in all of them. He addresed the Rio clericus, giving a splendid outline of the significance of the Church and the relation that should exist between the Brazilian Church and the rest of the Anglican Communion.

As Dr. and Mrs. Zabriskie left Rio on August 22 they left behind them a splendid impression and one that will last for many years and that will serve to bind the Brazilian Church more closely and intimately with the Virginia Seminary, by whom the Brazil Mission was founded.

Secretary of Education.

The Rev. Joao Baptista Barcellos da Cunha has been appointed by the Bishop as Secretary of Education.

Under the Constitution recently adopted religious instruction can be given in all public schools. The Rev. Mr. da Cunha's work will be the preparation of a complete course of instruction and the appointment of teachers for any school where the number of children desiring religious instruction may justify such appointments. His work is carried on in close association with the State Ministry of Education and Health, and also with the Roman Catholic and Lutheran Churches.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

PRAYER FOR HAITI.

Almighty God our Heavenly Father, we humbly pray Thee that Thy blessings may rest upon the Bishop of Haiti and upon all our missionaries in his district; that they may be guided by Thy good spirit, that success may attend their labors, and that peace and happiness may be their reward. And grant that we may have a part in their work by sharing with them our interests, our prayers, and our substance; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

HOME CONDITIONS NOT SO BAD IN ALL SAINTS' PARISH IN THE VIRGIN ISLANDS.

St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.—Family life and home conditions are so bad in many homes around All Saints' Church at St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands that Deacon English and Deaconess Smith have felt compelled to rescue three or four waifs and take them temporarily into their home until better arrangements can be made for them. There is no budget appropriation for this, but special gifts have made the work possible on a small scale and the house provides space as it was formerly a convent when the Sisters of St. Anne were at the mission. The children attend public school if they are old enough, and the public welfare office sometimes contributes to their support. Four children the deaconesses took in last year all improved in condition and were placed in other homes.

Ignorance and poverty, illness and undernourishment, illegitimacy, neglect because of parents' death or disability, these and other causes are responsible for the children's troubles, which as a rule yield to simple treatment and training such as the home provides. The good influence of the home is out of proportion to its size.

One child was in charge of her grandmother who beat her. One was a bright girl of fifteen who had recurring attacks of melancholia; she was the oldest of seven children whom a widowed mother was bringing up on a pension of four dollars a month. The mission secured an increase in the pension. One was a child whose mother had died and whose father had taken in another women with children of her own.

CHURCH GENERAL HOSPITAL IN CENTRAL CHINA CONDUCTS TRAINING CLASSES.

Wuchang, China.—Training classes for midwives have been carried on for some years past at the Church General Hospital in Wuchang, Central China. This summer a distinguished group of Chinese men and women have formed a board of directors for this midwifery training school. The board's chairman is the wife of the governor of the province. Another member is the wife of the provincial commissioner of education and others are representative people who are seriously interested in the training of qualified midwives to help meet the tremendous educational need in such work.

Pre-Natal Clinic Opened.

A new pre-natal clinic for charity patients only has been opened. The hospital is supposed to have a wing added to house its increasing maternity work. Three-fourths of the money is in hand and only the final $10,000 (Chinese money—now about $4,000 U. S. currency) is lacking.

The Church General Hospital graduated its largest class of nurses this year, sixteen, together with one laboratory technician and three midwifery students who were already graduate nurses.

Hospital Fails to Save Engine.

Dr. Mary L. James writes of the almost continuous nightmare the hospital has had for a year and a half, due to the bad behavior of the engine supposed to generate electricity for the X-ray and other purposes beyond the capacity of the city electric power. The hospital followed all the advice of the local agent, but the engine recently died a complete and violent death and the matter has been referred to the manufacturers in Germany. Dr. James says, "If anyone reading this letter has any influence with the Deutz Diesel Engine Company in Germany, please speak a word for us!"

CHURCH BUILT BY LAYMAN.

Tokyo, Japan.—Another instance is reported of what can be accomplished for the Church when one layman is interested. This time the story comes from a remote village in Japan, where there was no church. A man named Tajima came to live in the little village a few years ago, started a Sunday school in his house for the village children, discovered about twenty Christians in the village, with their help somehow raised $100, was presented with the wood from an old house, secured a grant from the diocese, and put up a little building to be used as a Church center, with an altar in the alcove which is the place of honor in a Japanese house. Regular services are now held and the place is visited when possible by the Japanese priest in charge who lives in Hakodate, eighty miles away.

Only individual communicants in parishes and missions can raise the funds necessary for the General Church in 1936.

The Church as an organzed army of Christian soldiers must not be content to continue the retreat when Christ has commanded that we advance.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

Georgia's Plan

The majority of our churches in the Diocese of Georgia are small. Indeed, only seven of them come up to the average for the whole country. Furthermore, except for those in three or four centres of population, they are all in small places. Under these conditions, a Program for Young People that was eminently suited for a diocese, most of whose churches were large and in large places, was found to be unsuited for Georgia.

Thus, the Young People of that diocese decided recently that they would cut the Gordian knot of the difficulty by going to what our National Department of Religious Education calls the "extreme left."

They had found that three things were happening:

1. The Y. P. S. L. in large places was tending to become a Separate Church for the Young People, and to serve as their substitute for the Church.
2. The Y. P. S. L. was not practical in the very small place where there were only a very few young people and they of widely differing ages and differing interests, so that the young people were losing touch with the Church in these places.
3. Thus, a more flexible Program was needed.

So they set to work to draw up a plan that would suit their needs.

The first thing they felt would be necessary was that they should keep the good in the old, and not be too radical. This, they believe they have done by keeping (1) the ideals as of Worship, Study, Fellowship and Service; (2) that the diocesan organization should continue to work through the parish to reach the young people; (3) that only communicants should hold office; (4) by keeping the idea of standards, though this was modified; (5) by keeping the Camp Convention and officers as was the District meeting, though this also was modified. So the best was not lost.

But there were many changes.

The first of these was typical, and fundamental. It dealt with the name which was thrown overboard completely. The Parish was taken as a unit and was subdivided into three divisions: The Children's Division, up to and including eleven years of age, or the sixth grade in school; the Young People's Division, from twelve years of age to twenty-three, inclusive; and the Adult Division, from twenty-four years up.

The idea is that every individual should be reached and made to realize that the Church has a place, a privilege and a duty for him. Thus parishes and missions are classified as of four types: the ordinary or large church, the small church, the smaller church, and the very small church. Thus if there be but two young people, and they of twelve and twenty-three years of age, they can work in this plan as a unit. For it is a Study and Work and Worship Program primarily. The Fellowship Ideal as stated is "to be friendly and courteous at all times, and to share with others the privilege I enjoy."

Each of these classes has a separate program. Thus the Large Church Young People's Division classes the young people according to grades in school in three groups. Grades 7, 8 and 9 are the first. Grades 10, 11 and 12 are the second, and the high school graduates are third. Elective studies in this class are: Bible Class, Church History, Christians in the Community, Acolytes' Class, Scouts, Hymnology, Drama, Prayer Book, Life Problems, Symbolism, Study of the Spirit of Missions and other Church Periodicals and Teacher Training. The idea is that even if there are only a few, that there can be something in the way of voluntary study for which the Church will give recognition.

It might be said that service would be the better way if it came first so as to provoke study rather than first study and then service. But the approach may be made from either angle. But if study is taken first, it should give rise to interests and activities. But whichever is taken up first, the other is very apt to wish an outlet in the other. So the following activities are suggested. Any service suggested, T. B. Units, service as acolytes, altar society, social activities, choir, pageants, membership and visiting committees, mission offerings other than money, story telling, and service as substitute Sunday-school teacher, and visiting jails as a group. Special diocesan activities are advance work of $1,800. They wish to build a boys' hut at Camp Reese at St. Simon's Island, the diocesan conference centre.

The Small Church class also has three groups. But these are according to age: 12-15 is the first; 15-18 is the second, and 19-23 is the third. Subjects for study in this rotate as prescribed by the rector. There are to be three teachers for this class, selected from the older group. The groups may meet where and when convenient; activities like the studies, should rotate as prescriber by the rector.

The third class, that of the Smaller Church, has two groups.

The fourth class, that of the Very Small Church, has but one group. Older memers furnish leadership, and the Diocesan Department of Religious Education assisting wtih units of study. Activities change as often as necessary. Units of work-study-interest may continue for two weeks, three weeks or months, as long as the interest lasts. By Activity we mean: spiritual, mental, physical (service) and social—the whole person being engaged.

Then, of course, there is the question of finance. In this matter, a finance committee consisting of the diocesan treasurer, the diocesan president and one counselor, prepare a budget each year, to which each parochial league is given a chance to contribute. This is quite a change from the old assessment idea, and it will be most interesting to see how it will work out. The budget for this year, it may be mentioned in passing, is $100. Contributions should be sent in April and in December.

There is also the item of reports. This probably kept a number of parishes from having representatives when they had to be handed in each month. So, in the new set up they are given in at the annual convention.

The diocese is divided into four districts, each of which has a diocesan vice-president at its head and meets twice a year.

It will be noted that, in the description given above, no mention has yet been made of the Ideal of Worship. Here is where there has been a danger in the past. For, very often, young people have considered that the meeting of their League has taken the place of the church service, so that they have become weaned away from it. So the Ideal of Worship is stated as "to attend regularly the services of the church and to be faithful in my daily private devotions." This is placed first among the Ideals and is stated in another place as "Church Attendance and Private Devotions. The young people of the division are expected to worship before the altar each Sunday and on the great feast and fast days of the Church, to be faithful in daily private devotions, and to have grace at meals."

The Ideal of Fellowship is also sometimes misleading. So, it is stated as "a sympathetic association with other young people through worship, service and study."

It has been stated that Georgia's plan has been described by the National Council of Young People's work, as the "extreme left wing of those who have gone adventuring for Christ," and in some ways it does seem to have been trying a number of radical experiments, but it certainly means one thing, and that is that the young people of that diocese are in dead earnest about the Church, and are moving forward. Perhaps the untried country in which they are advancing may bring some defeats along with many victories. But "nothing ventured, nothing gained," applies as well to Young People's Work as to any other. And, though changes may be made at any time in the light of experience, we remember that "the only person who never changes his mind is the person without any mind to change"; and, if, in the adventuring, catastrophes may seem to out-number the accomplishments, that

"Victor from vanquished issues at the last,
And overthrower from being overthrown."

The Secretary of the Department of Religious Education will be glad to answer definite questions regarding the work of the young people in this diocese.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

MEETING OF THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS: THREE MISSIONARY BISHOPS ELECTED.

Houston, Texas.—Seventy-five Bishops from Home and Foreign fields attended the annual session of the House of Bishops held in Houston, Texas, November 5, 6 and 7, and took action of great significance on a wide range of matters to the Church. First in interest was the election of two foreign and one domestic missionary bishops to fill vacancies in North Tokyo, Liberia, and Idaho, respectively. By the unanimous action of the House, the Rt. Rev. Chas. S. Reifsnider, Suffragan Bishop of North Tokyo, was elected Bishop to succeed Bishop McKim, the patriarch of our Japan Mission, whose resignation, due to age and its infirmities, was accepted by the House. The form of Bishop Reifsnider's election as well as the fact bore tribute to a long and distinguished service, especially in the field of education.

The House on the first ballot elected the Very Rev. Leopold Kroll, Dean of Trinity Cathedral, Port au Prince, Haiti, to be Bishop of Liberia, succeeding the Rt. Rev. Robert E. Campbell, after ten years of service in this exacting field.

Nominations for Liberia included the Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, rector of Truro Parish, Fairfax, Virginia; the Rev. W. Josselyn Reed, rector of St. Paul's Church, Columbia, Pennsylvania, both of whom had served as missionaries in Liberia. Dean Kroll has served both in Honolulu and in Haiti, an experience calculated to prepare him for the tropical Liberian climate.

The Rt. Rev. Frederick Bartlett, Bishop of North Dakota, was translated from that district to Idaho after a prolonged consideration by the House of the general question of the boundaries of dioceses and missionary districts in the far northwest. Present distribution of population and the development of means of transportation suggest that state boundaries or even the boundaries of present dioceses and districts are not well located for purposes of administration. The translation of Bishop Bartlett leaves North Dakota temporarily under the jurisdiction of the Presiding Bishop. The House of Bishops suggesting, however, the wisdom of a future translation of Bishop Remington from Eastern Oregon to North Dakota, and further territorial adjustments with the possibility that the present district of Eastern Oregon be added to the Diocese of Oregon. It was expressly stated in the resolution that any change in the status of Bishop Remington be dependent upon his acceptance of such change. In the meantime the Presiding Bishop and the President of the National Council have been asked by the House to confer with the Diocese of Oregon in the matter of the suggested reunion with Eastern Oregon. One redivision of territory was agreed upon when the House adopted a proposal that the part of the Missionary District of Idaho lying north of the Salmon River be incorporated in the Missionary District of Spokane.

Bishop Bartlett, long an earnest advocate of changes in missionary district boundaries, will continue to serve as Executive Secretary of the Department of Domestic Missions of the National Council while serving Idaho.

Elections by the House concerned missionary jurisdictions only and filled two of the six vacancies caused by resignation. This list, an unusually long one, included the Bishops of Newark, North Tokyo, Kentucky, Liberia, Central New York and the Bishop Coadjutor of New Jersey. Execept in the instance of the Bishop of Liberia, these had been announced well in advance of the meeting. All were referred to the committee on resignations of Bishops, all were unanimously accepted.

Deaths of the Year.

In the midst of a deep hush, the members of the House standing, the Presiding Bishop read the list of the Bishops of the Church who have died since the meeting of General Convention in Atlantic City, and offered appropriate prayers. The list follows:

The Rt. Rev. Manuel Ferrando, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of Porto Rico, Deceased December 12, 1934.

The Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Sometime Bishop of Southern Ohio, Deceased January 14, 1935.

The Rt. Rev. Ralph E. Urban, S. T. D., Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of New Jersey, Deceased May 19, 1935.

The Rt. Rev. Samuel Babcock Booth, D. D., D. C. L., Bishop of Vermont, Deceased June 17, 1935.

The Rt. Rev. Walter Taylor Sumner, D. D., Bishop of Oregon, Deceased September 4, 1935.

The Rt. Rev. Edward Fawcett, D. D., Ph. D., Bishop of Quincy, Deceased September 18, 1935.

The Rt. Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D.. D., Bishop of Tennessee, Deceased October 3, 1935.

Resolutions Adopted Concerning Peace and War.

The House while failing to mention either Italy or Ethiopia, adopted resolutions concerning peace and war as drafted by a Committee of which Bishop Freeman of Washington was Chairman, which vigorously protest against war in general and the present violation in Northern Africa.

Discussion of Missionary Support.

The House gave prolonged consideration to the present crisis in missionary support. The discussion took two directions. The first grew out of the reception of a report concerning the situation in general submitted by a committee of five, including Bishop Ingley, Chairman, and Bishops Davis, Maxon, Mitchell and Larned, which stresses the gravity of the situation, urges determined steps to increase the effectiveness of the current Every Member Canvass, and in lieu of a general Pastoral, secured the adoption of a plan by which each Bishop is immediately to issue to his clergy a Pastoral adapted to the local situation.

The gravity of the situation lies in the fact that the goal of the askings in dioceses and missionary districts for the missionary work of the Church in 1936 is $538,273 less than the amount needed to restore the work to the $2,700,000 level, decreed by the General Convention at Atlantic City. Further gravity enters the situation, because the amount needed from pledges to keep the present Emergency Schedule in effect in 1936 is $1,580,589, while the sum of the Objectives reported by the diocese to the National Council is $151,288 short of this figure. In a sentence, these figures mean failure even to ask for the present stand-still program, while if the actual budget of restoration is to be achieved there must be an increase of eleven per cent in pledges for 1936 above the present distressing level.

The House of Bishops facing the situation in a spirit of optimistic realism and without undue discouragement decided to make the facts known and to call upon their people to share improved financial conditions with the Church.

The second phase of the discussion grew out of a request from the National Council that the House of Bishops give judgment and advice "as to what it deems desirable and necessary in the way of promotion by the Field Department of the National Council." A wide range of debate that included enthusiastic approval of the promotional record as well as criticism resulted in the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved: That looking toward such a report, the National Council asks the House of Bishops at its meeting in November to give its judgment and advice as to what it deems desirable and necessary in the way of promotion by the Field Department of the National Council."

Bishop Hobson Unfolds Purposes of the Forward Movement.

The Forward Movement loomed large in the thought of the House of Bishops who heard from Bishop Hobson, Chairman of the Commission, repeated and emphatic declarations that the Movement to produce all of the results which might fairly be expected of it in the light of progress to date, depended absolutely upon the whole-hearted and sustained cooperation of the Bishops as the spiritual leaders of the Church.

Bishop Hobson unfolded the purposes of the Movement in an impressive meditation at the Quiet Hour of the House, which preceded the opening session of Tuesday night. During the sessions of the House further opportunity was given to him to recite the beginning of the work, its progress to date, the literature in use and in preparation and some of the results already manifest.

Committee Assignments.

Permanent Committee assignments announced by the Presiding Bishop were of Bishop Wilson of Eau Claire to the Committee on Constitution and Canons in succession to the late Bishop Gailor, and Bishop Budlong of Connecticut to the Committee on Resignations of Bishops.

Action was taken concerning Missionary Prayer Book and Hymnal Administration of Holy Communion, Licensing of Laymen to administer Chalice and various Messages of Sympathy or Greeting.

Resolution on Centennial of Spirit of Missions.

On motion of Bishop Jenkins of Nevada, the House took cognizance of the Centennial of The Spirit of Missions to be celebrated throughout 1936, the first issue having appeared January, 1835, and adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved: That the House of Bishops congratulate the Church upon the completion by The Spirit of Missions of a century of constructive and fruitful service on behalf of Missionary work and workers both at home and abroad; commends the present high standard of the magazine; and bids its staff Godspeed as it faces a future of continued edifying service."

Texan Efficiency and Hospitality.

Arrangements for the meeting of the House were perfected under the direction of Bishop Quin of Texas and were up to the highest standards of Texas efficiency and hospitality. The opening Quiet Hour was held in Christ Church, the Rev. James Perry DeWolfe, rector, which in another year will observe its centenary, throughout that period a convincing unit of Churchly life in the very heart of Houston. Following the Quiet Hour, a public dinner attended by more than four hundred Churchmen and Churchwomen presided over by Bishop Quin in greeting to their guests was given in the Rice Hotel. Business sessions were held in the beautiful Parish House of Palmer Memorial Church, fronting Rice Institute on the outer rim of the city, of which the Rev. Peter Gray Sears is rector. Many of the visitors were entertained in homes of Churchmen and every possible want was freely and fully met during the whole period of the gathering. Genuine sinserity entered into the resolutions of appreciation to the Bishop, his committees and all who had had part in entertainment and to the press of the city which gave generous space to accurate and sympathetic report.

Chicago Chosen for Place of Next Meeting.

The House unanimously advised the choice of Chicago for its meeting of October 1936, when it is proposed by the Bishop of Chicago with the assent of the Presiding Bishop to invite the Anglican Episcopate of the Western Hemisphere to Celebrate the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Chicago "Quadrilateral," the basis of the Movement to effect Christian Unity in terms of Faith and Order which program enunciated at Chicago in 1886, was adopted by the Lambeth Conference in 1900 and remains fundamental to the movement. Invitations for the meeting from the Bishops of Indianapolis and Western North Carolina were withdrawn in favor of Chicago in view of the endorsement given the proposed celebration at Chicago by General Convention. The event promises to be among the most notable in the life of the American Church.

KAGAWA'S ABLE CO-WORKER—MRS. KAGAWA.

The visit of Kagawa to the United States lends interest to this note about his wife, written by Loretta Shaw. Miss Shaw is an English woman long resident in Tokyo. She writes an annual summary, always most enlightening, about Japanese affairs and this year devotes most of it to Kagawa. Her article appears in Japan Church Aid, quarterly of the Guild of St. Paul, an English Church society interested in Japan.

"A word must be said about Mrs. Kagawa, who is such an able co-worker with Dr. Kagawa in all his manifold activities. How she ever runs that big establishment is a mystery. Up every morning at five, her busy hands and head work unceasingly till eleven or later at night. She and a young girl prepare three meals a day for twelve people and on Sunday she often has thirty to dinner.

She dresses her three children and sends them off to school with their lunch before eight o'clock, orders all the food from the Cooperatives, attends to all the cleaning and cooking, greets all visitors and brings tea and cakes for them, and helps in any department that is short of workers, and goes to speak in meetings or to help on committees.

At the present moment she has exactly doubled her household by taking in twelve famine children to care for. Her strong, loving Christian influence is felt in every part of the work and to her falls the great task of attending to the many letters which come to Kagawa asking for spiritual help and leading. Hundreds of people have been led into the light and joy of Jesus Christ through her wise and devoted guidance.

"She and her husband are so completely one in their life of prayer and devotion that the same inner light shines out from both their faces and both give out that impression of perfect repose and yet of intense energy and vitality which is the mark of the saints and prophets of every age, in every clime."

Swedish Services in Trinity Chapel.

The great Swedish hero and defender of the faith, King Gustavus Adolphus, who died at the battle of Lutzen, November 6, 1632, was commemorated at a Swedish National Festival, held November 6, in Trinity Chapel, Trinity Parish.

This festival marks the opening of the Swedish services at Trinity Chapel, recently transferred from St. Bartholomew's Protestant Episcopal Church.

The following are some of the clergy who participated in the service: Bishop Manning, Dr. Fleming, rector of Trinity Parish; Dr. Sutton, vicar of Trinity Chapel; the Very Rev. J. Gottfrid Hammarskold, D. D., former Dean of the Swedish Convocation and first pastor of the Swedish Episcopal congregation in New York City, now retired; Dr. George P. T. Sargent, rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City; the Rev. Carl J. Ljunggren, pastor of the Church of the Resurrection, Hopewell Junction, New York; the Rev. J. Benjamin Meyers, curate of Trinity Chapel, and the Rev. Eric G. Ericson.

It is estimated that 1,000 Swedes attended the service.

The service was in the Swedish language.

Beginning November 3, services in the Swedish language will be held in Trinity Chapel every Sunday at 8 P. M. and on all the high church festival days. The Swedish congregation will be in the charge of the Rev. Eric G. Ericson.

Parish Dinner to Follow Sunday Service.

A Sunday Parish Dinner for the congregation of Grace Church, is to be held for the first time on Sunday, November 17, as part of a general program to bring the parishioners together into a closer knit social fellowship.

The Parish Dinner will be held at the famous Hotel Brevoort, scene of many notable banquets and soon to be razed. It will immediately follow the morning service.

A distinguished preacher will occupy the pulpit of Grace Church that morning, and will also speak at the dinner. He is Canon J. S. Bezzant, Chancellor of Liverpool Cathedral, England, who is lecturing this fall at Union Theological Seminary. Canon Bezzant was formerly Fellow, Dean and Chaplain of Exeter College, Oxford University.

Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, will preside at the dinner and discuss the plans and activities of the parish for the year.

A Sunday Evening Supper Club which meets every Sunday evening at 6:15, provides a social and spiritual fellowship for the younger married and single people in the parish. The group discuss the problems of modern life and the possibilities for fuller living that Christianity offers.

Noon Organ Recitals Offered Business People.

A series of Friday noon organ recitals which are planned to offer business people and others a brief period of rest and spiritual peace through music will be given by Ernest Mitchell, organist and choirmaster in Grace Church, starting November 15. The recitals begin at 12:30 and last for a half hour. The public is invited "to come when they can and leave when they must."

The organ at Grace Church is one of the largest and finest in New York.

The Presiding Bishop's Itinerary.

The diocese has followed, with interest, the itinerary of its bishop, the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., who is on a tour of six weeks for the general Church. He is accompanied by Mrs. Perry. The Rhode Island papers are liberal with their space in reporting his movements. He left this city October 31 for Houston, Texas, to preside over the House of Bishops. With the adjournment of that body on November 7, he went to Galveston, Texas. On Sunday, November 10, he was with Bishop and Mrs. Moore at Dallas, Texas; on Armistice Day, with Bishop Seaman at Amarillo. November 18, he will be with Bishop Howden at Albuquerque; November 18, with Bishop Mitchell at Phoenix, Arizona; November 23-27, with Bishop Sanford at Fresno and San Francisco; November 28-December 3, he will be in Los Angeles. He will meet the Archbishop of York at Washington Cathedral on December 8. He will attend the National Council in New York December 9-14. On December 15, he will be in Worcester, Mass., to preach at the one hundredth anniversary of All Saints' Church.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary. Impressions and Inspiration Gathered.

Looking back over the several sessions of the forty-fifth annual meeting of the Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, which was held in St. James' Church, Richmond, October 29-31, it would seem that those who attended must have carried home a wealth of reports of achievements, many messages of inspiration and more than one very vital challenge. Space permits mention of only a few of these reports, but each one was full of interest along many lines. Mrs. Barton's report of the organization as a whole showed a splendid advance, not only in contributions and increased membership, but in study and worship as well. Though Mrs. Guy's treasurer's report revealed the fact that not all items on the pledge list are "over the top", surely her story of the "figure" of Archdeacon Neve will remind us in future to be "starched" Christians! And who could forget Mrs. Oppenhimer's "voices" which she, like Joan of Arc, heard calling her to battle—though her banner was the C. P. C. and not that of a King of France! Mrs. Woodward told how Shrine Mont is not only growing as a conference centre, but by its beauty of setting and the quiet, happy life on that wooded hillside has been the means of restoring to health of body and mind more than one to whom the stress of present-day life has brought discouragement When Mrs. Hill asked for contributions for the needs of the mountain missionaries, it did not take long for the fund to be over-subscribed as one delegate after another stood up and pledged her branch to $2, $3 or $5 to help provide stoves and other necessities for many of the mission stations. The total offering, which was taken up at the Corporate Communion and the two mass meetings, amounted to $332.29, and more came in afterwards. This sum was divided among a number of needs, including colored work, the much-needed well at the cross-roads and a small amount for work in Mexico.

Mr. Batcheller gave the first message of inspiration in the lesson from Isaiah so beautifully interpreted at the Meditation preceding the Holy Communion. Each one who took part in that great Corporate Communion must have had a deepened sense of reverence, humility and willingness to serve. There was inspiration, too, in Dr. Neve's comparison of the soul and the atom and in Miss Winegar's "pictures" from the Archdeaconry. And lastly, Mrs. Zabriskie brought us from far south of the equator, from the land to which so many Virginians have gone on active service for the Master, the vision of that cross high upon the mountain-top overlooking the harbor of Rio de Janeiro, with its call to us to continue to bring to those peoples the gospel of the LIVING Christ.

On the first night Bishop Creighton drew a wonderful background for the Church's work in Latin America; he told stirring stories of service and sacrifice in Mexico and through it all was the challenge to greater missionary endeavor, not in any one field at home or abroad, but as a part of our very lives themselves. Completing the picture of these days was the challenge made by Dr. Powell when he spoke on the Forward Movement the second night. Nothing could have been more fitting than his reminder that achievements bring with them, not the right to retire in ease, but rather greater responsibilities and more achievements to be won. In conclusion, he told the story of Samuel and how he received the Lord's call, not in a flurry of excitement springing into action hurriedly, but first "he lay until morning", thinking the thing through and then went out and performed the simple, routine task, "he opened the doors of the house of the Lord".

After a meeting so filled with information and inspiration, surely the coming year should be crowned with greater achievements than ever for the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Virginia.

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

Armistice Day Observed in All the Churches.

As a consequence of Bishop Taitt's call, all Episcopal churches throughout the diocese were open all day Monday, November 11, for prayers and intercessions. Under the leadership of the Pennsylvania Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary thousands of women in the more than two hundred congregations visited their respective churches during the day to engage in prayer for the establishment of peace and the end of war.

Under the direction of the Bishop arrangements were also made for a special public Armistice Day service to be held in the Church of the Holy Trinity, beginning at 10 A. M., and at which the Hon. Roland S. Morris, former United States Ambassador to Japan, delivered a special Armistice Day address. This service began with a celebration of the Holy Communion, at which the Bishop was the celebrant. During the remainder of the day the Rev. Mr. Weir and other clergy of Holy Trinity conducted intercessions at half-hour intervals.

Bishop Taitt, in his call for the observance of Armistice Day, said:

"In view of the present horrible menace of war, and in conjunction with the call of the Presiding Bishop to the whole Church, I hereby bid you to a special devout observance of Armistice Day. Let us unitedly 'lift up our hearts' to Almighty God that hostilities may be averted, that aggression be overcome, that all nations may seek peace."

In connection with the arrangements for all women of the Episcopal Church to join with other women throughout the world in prayer in their respective churches, Mrs. Ruth M. Morris, Devotional Chairman of the Pennsylvania Woman's Auxiliary ,in a statement issued to women refers to the world-wide joy which marked Armistice Day, 1918, when the carnage and bloodshed of the World War came to an end. Continuing, Mrs. Morris said:

"And now, today, as another November 11 approaches, black clouds of war are looming. Let us, the women of the Church, band together to a woman on this Armistice Day, and lift our hearts for Peace and understanding among men and women. For there is Power in Prayer. It is to be a great wave of Intercession for Peace; dedication of ourselves to the cause of establishing standards of Honor and Righteousness in all public affairs. God waits for His children truly to seek that peace which is the fruit of Righteousness. Do we not believe that He can use and bless our prayers towards the accomplishment of His great Purpose of Peace on Earth?"

Rt. Rev. Edward T. Demby,. D. D., Suffragan.

Diocesan Service Great Success.

The Diocesan Service held in Trinity Cathedral, Little Rock, on the night of October 30, was a great event in the development of the diocese. The service was in the nature of a Diocesan Rally as a part of the Forward Movement. The Diocesan Chairman of the Forward Movement is Dean John Williamson. The Bishop and Executive Council approved the plan for this event.

The Service was devout and beautiful. The splendid Cathedral Choir led the processional, followed by the clergy and the Bishops. Bishop Demby and the colored priests were in attendance and much appreciation of their presence was expressed. Doctor Karl Block of St. Louis, was the preacher for the Service. He gave an outline of the beginning of the Forward Movement, some of its main features, emphasizing the fact that it is not a financial campaign but a real effort to restore the devotional life of the Church, to call the children of the Household of Faith to a life of Discipleship motivated by deep personal love for our Blessed Lord and His Church. He went into some of the implications and results of this life of Discipleship. His earnestness, simplicity of devotion, interesting presentation, and inspired thoughts made a deep impression. There was a large congregation, made up of delegates from all the parishes and some of the missions.

Provision was made in the service for short addresses to be made by three of the diocesan clergy: the Rev. Bradner J. Moore, Chairman of a special committee appointed by the Bishop and Executive Council to aid parishes and missions in financial and other matters; the Rev. William T. Holt, missioner; the Rev. C. D. Lathrop, Chairman of the Field Department. These speakers very briefly presented the efforts that are being made to work out a complete program for the rehabilitation of the diocese. Bishop Saphore presided in the Service and directed the presentations of the seakers.

Church Property to be Remodeled.

Extensive plans are being made to remodel the church and rectory of St. Mary in ElDorado. Since the Rev. Bradner J. Moore became rector in 1933 steady progress has been made in restoring the parish. A large number of communicants have been added and the finances have steadily improved. Mr. Moore is showing what good business management can do in the establishment of a parish.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

A Great Week at St. Peter's, Roanoke.

From Monday, November 4 to Friday, inclusive, the Rev. Richard R. Beasley of Emmanuel Church, Bristol, held a most interesting and helpful series of mission services at St. Peter's Church, Roanoke, where the Rev. Marshall N. Bacot is rector. His subject in the evenings were: Symbolism and Its Meaning, The History of the Church, Prayer, Worship and the Holy Communion, and The Contribution of the Church to the People of Today.

Each morning in the home of one of the parishioners, Mr. Beasley conducted a Quiet Hour, with meditations on the Beatitudes. Tuesday afternoon he addressed the Woman's Auxiliary and on Wednesday he spoke at a supper for the men of the congregation. After the supper there was formed a Men's Club of St. Peter's Church, with Mr. Lester Thurman as President; Mr. R. H. Eubank, Jr., Vice-President, and Mr. J. E. Roberts, Secretary and Treasurer.

Church Property Not Seriously Damaged.

Church property in Miami escaped serious damage in the sudden storm of November 4, which destroyed much other property, especially along the water front.

The Rev. G. Irving Hiller, rector of Trinity Church, reported that his parish had no special damage. St. Agnes' Church, our largest colored congregation, had some damage to the roof and the windows, with similar damage each to the rectory, parish house and the social hall, but apparently not of large amount for any one of the four buildings. The Rev. J. E. Culmer is priest in charge of St. Agnes' Church, and has done a remarkable work in the upbuilding of this congregation.

Christ Church, Coconut Grove, another colored congregation adjoining Miami, also had damage to roof and windows of the church, parish house and school buildings.

Bishop Wing's Tenth Anniversary Celebrated.

Celebrating the tenth anniversary of Bishop Wing's consecration, clergy and laity of South Florida gathered in Orlando on October 30, this observance arranged for the date of Bishop Wing's arrival in this diocese instead of on the date of his consecration, St. Michael and All Angels' Day, 1925. Preceding this event, a clergy conference was held on October 29 by Bishop McDowell, whose helpful leadership dealt especially with the Church's Program and the preparation for the Every Member Canvass.

Nearly all clergy of the diocese attended this conference and remained as guests of the Cathedral Parish for the anniversary observance of the following day. On October 30, the Holy Communion was celebrated at 7:30, and a choral celebration followed at eleven o'clock, with Bishop Wing as celebrant. The clergy attended in vestments for this service and for the festival evensong at 8 P. M., when Bishop McDowell preached a forceful sermon on the Forward Movement. A delightful reception at Bishopstead, arranged by the Woman's Auxiliary, gave further opportunity to extend cordial greetings and felicitations to Bishop and Mrs. Wing, who are both greatly beloved.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

Budget Recommended.

The Executive Council of the diocese met October 30 and recommended a budget for 1936 of the same figure as this year's budget. The Bishop's Pence, inaugurated in October, is participated in by all but three parishes in the diocese, according to the report of the secretary. The first Pence Sunday will be December 8.

Plan to Hold Missions.

Several preaching and teaching missions are already planned for, following upon the recommendation of the autumn clergy conference. Bishop Almon Abbott will conduct an eight-day preaching mission in St. Paul's Church, Newport, beginning November 24. The Rev. W. G. Pendleton will conduct an eight-day teaching mission in his own parish, Trinity Church, Covington, beginning November 10. The date has not been set for the mission to be conducted jointly by the Rev. L. B. Catlin, deacon-in-charge of the Big Sandy district, and the lay reader in charge of the Mission of St. John the Divine, Shelbiana, Mr. Harry Lusk, in that church.

St. Peter's to Celebrate Anniversary.

The sixty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of the present building of St. Peter's Church, Paris, will be celebrated November 18. The anniversary sermon will be preached by Bishop Abbott on Sunday, the seventeenth. A pageant depicting the history of the parish will be presented on the twenty-fourth. St. Peter's celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its founding in 1933.

One Hundredth Birthday Celebrated.

Charles Rieckel, of Cynthiana, the Church of the Advent's oldest communicant, celebrated his one hundredth birthday October 27. The local Masonic bodies sponsored a public reception for him.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

St. John's Church, Baltimore.

Seventy-five years ago, on All Saints' Day, Bishop Whittingham consecrated the present St. John's Church, Waverly, Baltimore, which took the place of one that had been destroyed by fire.

On the evening of All Saints' Day this year Bishop Helfenstein, assisted by a number of the clergy, and in the presence of a very large congregation, conducted a service of renewal of consecration. Both the senior and junior choirs had charge of the music. After the choirs had entered the church, the Bishop and clergy tarried on the porch and parts of the Consecration Service was read. At an appropriate time the Bishop made the sign of the cross on a large stone touching the door. Immediately a stone mason carved a cross on that spot in commemoration of this seventy-fifth anniversary of the consecration of the church.

The Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, read the original sentence of Consecration. The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., rector of the Mother Church of the city, preached an appropriate and historical sermon, tying up the service with the thoughts of All Saints' Day.

The Rev. William Dallam Morgan, for many years the beloved rector of the church, made an address. The Bishop congratulated the congregation on its record of seventy-five years of activity and urged every one to walk in the footsteps of those who had made St. John's Church what it is today.

The celebration continued on Sunday, November 3. The cornerstone, recently located and appropriately carved, was unveiled in the presence of a large gathering. Following the unveiling of the cornerstone, there was a reception in the Parish House for the entire congregation. Many old members of the church were present. Among the notable guests was Miss Lizette Woodward Reese, who spent her early girlhood in this parish and has immortalized the name of Waverly in her books, "The Victorian Village" and "The York Road".

The choir of thirty years ago sang and the original melodian, which was the first instrument ever played in the present church, was played again by Mr. Clarence Bowerman, once organist and choir director at St. John's.

"Flashes in Religious Education."

Miss Elizabeth S. Thomas, Director of Religious Education in the diocese, has been selected as one of the regular contributors to a new publication of the Religious Education Department of the Province of the Mid-West, "Flashes in Religious Education." The Very Rev. Victor Hoag, of Eau Claire, Wisconsin, is Chairman of the Provincial Committee appointed to produce this new publication, which is to be printed according to Church seasons, and used first throughout the Province. The publication is to be printed in "flash card" form, each issue consisting of twenty or more light 3x5 cards exactly like those used in library filing; the idea being to encourage the clergy and leaders in Religious Education to file the cards for future use if the information they contain is not immediately helpful. The cards will contain findings in Religious Education for use in Church School and religious educational training, and will consist of six departments —Church School, Pre-School, Teacher Training, Young People, College Work and Boys' Work.

"Addresses" Deaf Congregation.

The Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the diocese, had the novel experience recently of making practically the same address twice in one week, once to a hearing congregation and once to a deaf group. On Wednesday evening, November 13, he spoke to the Men's Club of the Church of the Ascension, Detroit, on "Japan", and on Friday he "addressed" the congregation of Ephphatha Mission, Detroit (St. John's Parish), for the deaf, on the same subject, using an interpreter. The Rev. Horace B. Waters, of Royal Oak, is Missionary to the Deaf in the diocese.

INNER CHAMBER.

Grace French Smith.

We must confess, our Father, that we neglect
The inner chamber—forget to close the door:
And the world drowns out Thy voice and its effect
Upon our tired hearts while we kneel and pray.
Oh, speak again, our Father, we implore,
When we kneel but fail to hear what
Thou dost say.
Forgive—and we'll try the harder to shut the door.

The Call From Arms.

Our great anniversaries are not meant to be mirrors into which we look and go our way and straightway forget what manner of men we are. A truth to be pondered with great searchings of heart is that Armistice Day came as the climax to Father and Son Week. Only in the measure that Christians search their hearts with the truth that they that take the sword shall perish by the sword, can it become sure that these beautiful boys of ours shall not perish from the earth in needless, futile war.

The anniversary has reminded us that the world has been to school under its harshest and most terrible teacher, almost a finishing school. The world, not just one country or two countries, but the world, has been taught by adequate lessons—whether it has learned the lessons is not so sure, but at least terribly taught, that there is no such thing, and can be no such thing, as a war to end war, if by that is meant a war waged with weapons of destruction. Is there a major nation today that is not weaker and poorer and more miserable since the war and because of the war than it was before the war? History offers no more complete demonstration of any proposition whatsoever than of this fact, which is an eternal truth, that war as a means of determining what is right between nations is needless now, and futile, unbearable in its burdens of taxes on both victors and vanquished, terrible in its toll of human life and treasure, awful in its sorrows, barbaric in its brutalities and legacies of hatred and fear and cherished, brooding revenge.

From time immemorial, men have heard the bugle call, To Arms, and have thrilled to that call, and have responded to it in the spirit of high adventure. It is time that Christians heard the Gospel call, From Arms, and find themselves thrilled to that call, responding to it with the passion of Calvary. The ancient symbol of destructive warfare was the sword. David put up a proffered sword, and without a sword put down a beastly braggart, and thereby put an end to a devastating war. Never mind that there was bloodshed there. David put up his sword. Great David's greater Son said, Put up thy sword, or perish by the sword. The world war, as we have just been reviewing it, has said, Put up thy sword, or perish by the sword. It is but an instrument of self-destruction. It is a telling coincidence that the man whom Jesus told to put up his sword is the very man who sounds the clarion call from arms, symbolized by the sword, to arms of a nobler kind, in the one kind of warfare that can end war. The only weapons that can destroy war are weapons fashioned from the mind of Christ. "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, ARM yourselves likewise with the same mind."

Will Rogers—"Good Indian."

Will Rogers was my friend. As he was the friend of many, so he was a friend of mine also—

"In simpleness and gentleness and clean mirth."

Our friendship started when he came one morning into my classroom in old Willie Halsell College at Vinita, Indian Territory, where I was acting as President of the College and trying to teach the Cherokee Indian boys who came. His reply to my asking, "What is your name?" was characteristic and prophetic—

"Bill," he said. "Maybe it is William," I said. "Naw," he said, "Jes' Bill." "What is the rest of it, Bill?" "Ain't no rest, Jes' Bill—Bill Rogers frum Claremore."

Many years later when he visited me in Ocala, Florida, we both laughed again about the first meeting, as we had often before. As he told of that first meeting, he looked about the family group and said:

"Teacher, you got you a fine squaw and four papooses. That beats me one. I jes' got three."

Later, when speaking to the Randolph-Macon Woman's College, he saw my oldest daughter down in the audience and said:

"I see the fine daughter of my old teacher, Dr. Dunkle, down there. Gal, I want to see you when I get through spieling here."

This photographic memory for names and faces was one of the traits which so endeared him to multitudes of persons.

He came of good Cherokee Indian stock. His father was a man of great importance in his Nation, and his mother sprang from its ruling clan also. Will was born to be a leader. His people all had been.

A few days before he started to Alaska I had a note from him which said only:

"Me and Wiley is off for Alasky.
I aim to have a hog-killin' time with that old Boy."

Nothing more. He never said much, I mean never said many words. He always called me, "Deer Teecher," and wrote about once a year, unless we had met. If so, he did not write.

Many people have wondered at his quaint saying: "Well, all I know is what I read in the papers." My wife used to say, "No wonder. He went to school to you." And, maybe that was the explanation.

In the old Missionary Voice of July 1914, Levi Levering, a Sioux Indian, and at that time superintendent of Nuyaka Boarding School at Beggs, Oklahoma, had an article with the caption: "Does It Pay to Christianize the Indian?" How strange a question that seems in the light of Will Rogers, Cherokee Indian, Friend of the World, "Friendly Ambassador from United States" to all Nations, Philosopher, Humorist, world-traveler and world-interpreter, Methodist Christian, the sort of man—whom Kipling describes as: "Gentleman unafraid."

And now he has gone to join that company who, like himself, had "loved and sailed and made our world." And,

"Ee'n as he trod that day to God,
So walked he from his birth—
In honor and gentleness and clean mirth."

—Rev. W. F. Dunkle, in Richmond Christian Advocate.

There Are No Alps.

Napoleon's drummer boy, you remember, did not know how to beat a retreat, so he beat a charge "that would wake the dead" and led the dispirited soldiers of the great Corsican to another grand victory—Marengo. All great generals have won by taking the offensive. Now learn a lesson of real fighting from these Roman legionaries.

The scene is a small Roman camp, numbering a scant 4,000 men, perched up among the towering Alps. Brave Galba, one of Caesar's trusted lieutenants, is in charge. One morning he wakes up to find that the treacherous Gauls to the number of 30,000 have seized the surrounding heights. A hurried consultation is held. They decide to fight it out—it is not the custom for the Romans to retreat without a victory. In a few moments the Gauls come tearing down upon them like demons hurling their heavy javelins—30,000 to 4,000—but those Romans have seen fighting before. For six long hours they hold out against fresh forces of the enemy. No chance for even the wounded to withdraw and stanch their wounds. But their ranks thin, their weapons give out. What to do? Then up runs Baculus, a man who when wounded in a previous engagement so that he could not stand, propped himself upon his shield and fought. With him is the brave and sagacious Volsenus. "Let us take the offensive," they cry to Galba.

Imagine it if you can—the hardihood of the thing! Weapons gone; strength gone; hosts of the enemy in front of them and about to overwhelm them, but—take the offensive. And they did it, those intrepid Romans. Withdrawing gradually from the battle line to pick up an extra weapon or two and to gain a moment's respite for the renewal of the attack, they burst out of every gate of the camp upon a surprised and bewildered foe. And they won!

When St. Paul talks to us about fighting, Christian comrades, remember he is thinking about these Romans. And now is the time for us to take the offensive anew, to press the battle at every gate, to beat the charge—and we shall win! —Selected.

CROSSES.

Grace French Smith.

White crosses—black crosses—
On the hills of France!
Beneath them lies an army of the dead.
Stirred by propaganda men came, men died,
Cannon fodder in France.

White crosses—black crosses—
Let the dead rise from their graves and march,
March past these charred ruins,
These cathedral towers.
Faint signs are near of trench and crumbling arch,
And shell holes now carpeted in green and gold.

Twenty abreast—twenty abreast—
The silent tread of destroyed men!
Eleven days for the British to pass—
Ten days for the French—
Three weeks of Russia's dogged step—
Four weeks for the Central Powers—
America follows,
And men from far corners of the Earth.

Four months I sit upon this tower and watch,
Blinding tears for food and sleep,
Before the procession ends,
This silent tread of destroyed men!

Genius slain—art and statesmanship
Wisdom gone—invention and research;
Love gone and the deep things of God.
For years the world carries in its arms
Maimed bodies and feeble minds.

Tramp, tramp—eternal tramp!
Oh, God—they've crushed our boys in the dust of France.
At the end, out of the mist, comes Christ bearing a cross,
His form is bent and the cross drips blood,
We have crucified the Lord of Love afresh—
The Prince of Peace.

Circus Food.

Popcorn is the companion of the circus. He likes the blare of trumpets, the dazzle of stage lights, and the big hand from the stands. Also he is a large package at little cost, and he is spiced to the appetite. Truly he suits his environment, for the circus is the popcorn of society.

Too much of our life is of the popcorn variety. Not that we despise this tasty goodie. Perish the thought! But after all one might as well eat the mist or the foam for all the satisfaction it brings. Even the taste is soon forgotten.

Character may become like that, without struggle, decision, and responsibility. Cheap, tawdry, and vulgar human beings degenerate in a society that thinks more of limelight than of sunlight, and this may be the danger in the mass movements of today. There will always be individuals and there will always be groups, but to subject the individual totally to the group is to rob him ultimately of the very qualities that constitute manhood. Social action is no substitute for individual initiative. It may end in popcorn and ginger pop.

Sometimes thought reminds one of popcorn. There is no reasoning to a conclusion, no sincere study of the question at issue and no individual effort to reach the truth. Doctored news, shrieking advertisements, and street corner propagandists are too often the sources of public information. Many minds are just the echo of what they heard around the corner.

The same may be said of influence. Many people pass by without leaving even a footprint on the sands of time. They pass out of the picture as if they had never been there. It may be because they were too shallow in themselves, or that they were sensitive, retiring and fearful, but it should never be so with one who bears the stamp of Jesus Christ upon his life. A Christian is distinctive, and what he does has something eternal in it.

Is it any wonder that the pleasures of the hour are of the popcorn variety? The razzle dazzle makes the mind a merry-go-round, educates the feet instead of the head, and fills the air with the tumult of cheap music into the drunken hours of morning. Even education has been known to play the popcorn vendor, knowing a smattering of everything and nothing about anything. To be serious and profound is accounted a crime in some quarters. On good authority we are told that the average mentality is twelve to fifteen years of age.

Popcorn personality, that is our trouble—a glorious field for political chicanery, quack nostrums, and claptrap of every variety. Even the new vocabulary is gooey with sugared ignorance and sticky with sentimentality. Truth defies the calliope.

Is there "strong meat" for the people of God? Then let us to it with a will. A skeleton soul is the ghost of revolution. —Presbyterian Banner.

"The Step Before Me."

I was greatly helped when I started out in the ministry by what an old brother told me. He said: 'You are a young man, and I want to tell you something from my experience. All my life in the ministry, now for more than fifty years, I have been able to see but one step at a time. Much of the time, it has seemed to me that I was coming right up against an impassable wall, but when I took the step that was before me, even and clear, I found that it either brought me to where I could turn the corner, or else the wall was removed; and, so for fifty years I have gone on preaching, and have had enough to eat and all the work I could do."

A Young, Blind Preacher.

We spent a Sabbath in Lucerne, but when we went to look for a Presbyterian church we found none. Lucerne is a Catholic city. There is only one native Protestant church in the city and the only English-speaking church is St. Mark's Anglican Church. We attended services there both times on Sunday and found them very helpful. The services are very much like those of the American Episcopal Churches. We were especially interested in the minister. He was a young minister from England, who was preaching at Lucerne during his vacation. We soon discovered that he was totally blind. There was something especially attractive about his personality. He had an unusually sweet voice. His prayers were remarkable. As the afternoon service was to be his last service in Lucerne, he devoted the time usually given to the sermon to giving us the story of his own religious experience, beginning with the accident by which he lost his sight at the age of fifteen and coming up to the present time It was a soul-stirring experience. That young blind preacher of the Church of England is a flaming evangelist in the finest sense of that word. He did us good and we shall always remember him and his services in Lucerne.

Mountain Dwellers.

Many of the most significant events in history have occurred on mountains. Jesus was a mountain-dweller. He was tempted on a mountain; He began His public ministry on a mountain; on a skull-shaped mountain He paid "life's arrears of pain, darkness and cold"; from the slope of a mountain He ascended in the attitude of blessing. But aside from these facts, Jesus' whole life was one of lofty aims and high purposes. Above the plane of animalism, indeed above the plane of more intellectuality, in the realm of truths which never could have been discovered by investigation of research, in the realm of forces which are not of the earth earthly; in communion with the Eternal, He spent His lonely, lovely years. Above the world of pleasure-seeking and money-getting; above the world of mere passive enjoyment; above the world of fame and social conquest, He lived, serenely and by choice.

A Beam From Heaven.

An interesting modern device coming into general use in aviation is what is known as the "radio beam." A recent air traveler tells how the plane in which he was flying from one city to another ran into a dense fog at night. The earth was entirely hidden from sight. "Then down through the fog," says the writer, "guided unerringly by radio's latest miracle, the plane held connection until it landed within fifty feet of the usual spot." The incident contains a rich suggestion for our spiritual life. The love of God is such a guide to the soul. It enables us to find our way through all the fogs of doubt, of misunderstanding, of sin and disappointment, to the peace that passeth all understanding which is the home of the soul. —Christian Observer.

"Nationalism Must Go."

This was the appeal made to governments at the recent Paris Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce, composed of a thousand business leaders from some thirty-five countries. The president of the Congress, a noted Dutch industrialist, declared that planned economy is short-sighted nationalism, and that the world needs a new approach to the recovery problem, an approach based on the spirit "that the prosperity of one nation depends on the prosperity of others." It is interesting to note that this expert on international commerce says that the United States has led the world in beginning the reduction of its tariff barriers by effecting cuts up to fifty per cent with countries making new commercial treaties. Cooperation between governments, he declared, is the key which will unlock the present jam.

FOR THE CHILDREN

LOVELY THINGS.

Sometime ago in the "British Weekly," published in London, England, there appeared some lists from children, in answer to a question, 'What are the loveliest things you know, persons not counted?" One girl gave this list:

The scrunch of dry leaves when you walk through them.
The feel of clean cloze (her spelling).
Cool wind on a hot day.
Climbing up hill and looking down.
Hotwater bottle in bed.

And then another girl sent this longer list:

Our dog's eyes.
Street lights on the river.
The smell of rain.
An organ playing.
Red roofs in green trees.
Smoke rising.
Rain on your cheeks.
The smell of new-mown hay.
Red velvet.
The moon in clouds.

A boy sent in this list:

The feel of running water.
Looking into deep, clear water.
The taste of strawberries.
A swallow flying.
Water being cut at the bow of a boat.
A mounted policeman's horse.
An express train rushing.
A builder's crane lifting something heavy.
The feel of a dive in deep, cool water.
A thrush singing.

—Ex.

Note: We would like to hear from some of our young readers of these pags of The Southern Churchman. Won't you send us a list of "the loveliest things you know?" We would like to publish them.

A Modern Knight.

There he hung from a limb of the tall elm, a very young robin who had somehow became entangled with a piece of string. Around him fluttered his mother, frantic with fear. And then she swooped to the ground and came back with a juicy worm which she fed to the prisoner, in an effort, presumably, to keep up his bird spirits. From my point of vantage, at the foot of the tree, I could not see whether the little feathered captive was overcome with terror or was bearing up well in his precarious position.

Around me was gathered a regiment of youngsters, armed with brooms and mops; in short, with everything that could be used to dislodge a small bird from an impromptu noose of string. They had secured a stool and took turns mounting it and poking at the robin. I tried my hand with a broom, but was unsuccessful in my attempt.

Unknown to us all, however, aid was approaching in the guise of an oil truck. With a creaking of brakes, it drew up to the curb and its young driver dismounted, a can of oil in each hand.

"What's the matter, kids? Cat up a tree?" Then, looking up, "a robin, eh? And trying to commit suicide. Well, we'll have to fix this."

Setting down his cans, he stepped upon the stool, then hoisted himself to a crotch of the tree. From there he climbed the trunk and crawled out on the limb where the robin still dangled. Reaching down, he untangled the string and placed the trembling bird on the limb. The rescue accomplished, he made his way to the ground.

For a moment he stopped to watch the mother bird caress and comfort her offspring. Then, picking up his cans, he went on his way, whistling a cheery air as he disappeared into a nearby house.—Exchange.

How the Wright Brothers Learned to Fly.

Two boys were sitting together near a big window watching for their father, who would soon come home. Their names were Wilbur and Orville Wright. When at last Mr. Wright came in sight the boys ran out joyfully to meet him. They noticed that he held one hand behind him.

"What is it?" they cried together. For answer Mr. Wright brought out a queer little object that looked something like a tiny box kite. "Here's a heliocopter," he said.

"Look, I will throw it on the ground," and he tossed it away from him. Wilbur held out his hands to catch the little object, but it did not fall. Instead, it rose up into the air.

The boys had never seen such a thing.

"Daddy," said Orville, "if birds and a heliocopter can fly, why can't we?"

"Because we have no wings," Mr. Wright answered.

"But why don't we make some?" Orville wanted to know.

"Well," said Mr. Wright, "some day when you grow to be a man perhaps you can make some wings big enough to use yourself."

"I will," said Orville.

"I will build a kite big enough to ride on when I am a man," said Wilbur.

This happened way back in 1878. The year 1900 came, and Wilbur and Orville Wright were now young men.

"Well, Wilbur," said Orville one day, "you never made that kite big enough to take a ride on."

"No," answered Wilbur, "and you never made your wings to fly with."

"I still think," Orville said, "that we ought to be able to fly. Just think of those big eagles that fly so easily. Some of them are most as heavy as we are."

"Well, let's watch the birds and see if we can find out how they do it," suggested Wilbur.

To help them carry out their plan the two brothers began to build a "glider". This glider looked something like a very large kite, and it also looked in some ways like the little heliocopter that Mr. Wright had brought home to Wilbur and Orville so many years before.

When the glider was finished they picked it up and started out for the little town of Kitty Hawk by the sea. Around on all sides were great sand dunes and thousands of birds soared in the sky.

The Wright brothers spent long hours lying in the sand watching these birds and they learned that they could fly long distance without flapping their wings. That showed that the birds were floating on air currents just as a swimmer can float in the water. They saw how the birds tipped their wings this way and that in order to balance and steer.

"Now that we have seen how they do it," said Wilbur, "let's try it, too, with our glider."

Out on the dunes they took the glider fastened to the end of a strong rope. They tugged it to the top of Little Hill and balanced it on the edge of the slope. Finally they gave it a gentle push out over the cliff. Down the slope it went—slowly at first, and then more and more quickly, until it was fairly racing. The brothers held their breath. Suddenly a rising air current caught the wings. The glider swept off the slope and flew!

The brothers were very happy about this, but their work was not done yet. They knew now that the glider would fly—but could they ride it? Could they steer it?

Again they brought the glider to the top of Little Hill. This time Wilbur was fastened in and Orville pushed it off just as before. Again it was caught up and again it flew.

"Now," said Wilbur after he had returned to the ground, "we must learn to steer the glider and to balance it so that it will stay in the air a long time." Day after day they practiced until both could steer and balance quite well.

"Now," said Orville, "I think we ought to put a motor in our glider." They began at once to build the motor, and when it was fastened to the glider the engine was started and it rose into the air and carried a passenger.

The Wright brothers' glider became known the world over. Its name was changed to airplane.—Selected.

A Dog's Politeness.

The dog, a sharp, little terrier, was known by the name of Moosie. The cat's name was Bruce. Moosie was taught by her mistress to sit up and beg. Of course, there was nothing very clever in that; many dogs can do that, But the amusing part was this: Bruce, noticing that Moosie sat up, with the important result that she received food for doing so, also took to sitting up, and each day at table you might have seen the funny spectacle of the dog and cat sitting side by side, begging for contributions! But funnier still was to follow. One day after she had finished her morning meal in her own tin saucer, Moosie, seeing that Bruce had food to dispose of, thought that, by a little politeness, she might induce the cat to share with her. So she walked up close to Bruce and deliberately sat up and begged of her. As you may guess, the cat did not take the slightest notice, but coolly finished her meal. Very likely Moosie, finding that politeness was of no avail, would have tried to help herself, had she not a very lively recollection of the fact that Bruce had sharp claws. After that Moosie was often seen to sit up and beg of Bruce when the latter was having her food.—Scottish American.

Priscilla's Red-Letter Day.

September 5 in the long, long ago was a red-letter day for blue-eyed, curly-haired Priscilla Crosby, for it was to be her first day in school. How big she felt as she helped mother to get all her belongings ready to take!

"Hurry, Martha and John," she called to her sister and brother as she started down the path to the gate. She was carrying a bright, new tin pail that held her lunch, and, as a special treat, mother had put in a gingerbread man with currant eyes.

Priscilla also had a slate and a primer. She had already learned her A B C's, and she could spell such simple words as "cat" and "pat" and "mat". Her new primer was neatly covered with pink muslin to match her pink bonnet. Her slate and pencil were new, and she was very proud of them. Some children did not have a new book and slate, when they started to school, but had to use those that had belonged to other members of the family; so Priscilla had an extra reason to be happy.

"I'm going to try hard never, never to break my slate or my pencil," Priscilla said to mother, when she kissed her good-bye. "I'm going to take very good care of them."

When they got near the schoolhouse they saw boys and girls coming from other directions. Priscilla felt timid. Then Prudence Alden whose sister Faith was the teacher, came and put her arm very gently around Priscilla and made her feel better.

When Faith came to the door of the school house and rang the bell which she held in her hand, the children came running and marched inside. Prudence took Priscilla by the hand and led her to her seat in the front row. The little pail and the pink bonnet had been hung in the back room with those belonging to the other children.

Prudence had a new slate, too, but when she looked for her pencil it was gone. There were tears in her eyes. How could she write her lessons without a pencil?

Priscilla looked at her new, long pencil for a minute. Then she broke it and gave Prudence one piece. When they ate their lunch outside beneath a tree, Priscilla was sitting beside Rebecca Smith. Rebecca did not have anything but cornbread for her lunch, so Prsicilla gave her half of the gingerbread man.

"Mother, mother," called Priscilla, as she ran to her after school was out and threw her arms around her neck. "I've got only half a pencil now, because I divided it with Prudence. But half a pencil writes as well as a whole pencil. And I gave Rebecca Smith half of the gingerbread man, because she only had cornbread for her lunch.

"You have learned a good lesson this day at school," mother said, as she kissed Priscilla.

A Bit of Bark.

"Why, it is nothing but a bit of bark," Lucy said, disappointed.

"Bark—of a dog?" Bob grinned.

"No, bark of a tree," Lucy returned, holding out a little gray-brown object, nearly four inches long and not half as wide.

"It does look like a bit of bark," Bob said, looking at it carefully, "but I think, if you don't want it I'll just take it home for my wood collection, may I?"

"Of course. I don't want any wood collections. I am collecting cocoons for my moth collection."

"And if this turns out to be a moth?"

"You're welcome to it. I think it is more likely to turn out to be an elm tree sprout."

Bob took the "bit of wood" home carefully. He spent his spare minutes making a cage, with a frame of wood and the sides of screen. He placed the "bit of wood" within it.

That occurred in March. One warm May day, Bob came home from school, seized his hat and started out to find the rest of the boys for a game of ball. He was half way across the street when he heard Lucy shrieking at him from the back porch.

"Come back! Quick!" Lucy squealed. "Hurry and bring the boys with you. Hurry!"

They hurried. Could the house be on fire? Could the cat have caught the parrot? Once on the back porch, Lucy pointed toward the cage.

"Your bit of bark," she whispered.

The cocoon, or bit of bark, was moving. There seemed to be a sort of tiny sound, like a clock ticking, a sound such as a fairy might make, knocking on a fairy door. Soon a queer gray-white object appeared. There was a patch of red, and below it two red-brown eyes. The white was the forehead.

"A moth!" Bob whispered as though he were afraid of awakening it, or causing it to disappear back into the cocoon.

Then two little black fronds, like watch springs, suddenly unwound, and Lucy whispered:

"Antennae!"

Then red-brown feet came waving into the air. They found something solid and began to crawl, and so the moth crept out of the cocoon.

"But there are no wings," Lucy wondered.

There was just a long red body, with circular bands of white around it. Nothing more. It rested. Then from the center of the back the miracle came. Tiny wings devleoped, dropping downward, growing longer. Larger and larger they grew, as the minutes passed, and the watchers stood spellbound. The wings might have been made of a transparent gray velvet, with the faintest markings of red and black. Then slowly, with a fan-like motion, the moth began to lift and to lower the wings, slowly at first and then faster, opening them wide, and then closing them over its back, and as this was repeated many times the wings dried, stiffened, became lighter in color and beautifully marked with red, black, tan, dark blue, gold, brown, rose and lavender.

"A miracle," Bob said almost reverently.

"What is it?" Lucy asked. "What kind of a moth?"

"I wonder if the wings will grow any larger?" Bob watched the moth for a few moments before replying. "I think we have discovered a very unusual moth and one that I have been studying about for a long time. When Lucy showed me the 'bit of bark,' I decided it must be the one I wanted. It has a long name: Cecropea. Pronounced Se-krope-a."

They pronounced it, as they watched the large, lovely creature fan its gorgeous wings. It was by far the largest moth they had ever seen. About six inches from tip to tip of its wings, and at least four and a half inches in length. Its rich reds and browns were a splendid background for the tans, and bright reds and golds and rose colors of the body and wings.

"If I had only known it was a cocoon," Lucy said, "but yet, I am glad you have it, Bob. It is yours and I can look at it as much as I like."

"It is a partnership moth, Lucy. But next year let's see how many 'bits of bark' we can find."

Legend of Zaccheus.

Krummacher has a pleasant little fable with a suggestion. When Zaccheus was old he still dwelt in Jericho, humble and pious before God and man. Every morning at sunrise he went out into the fields for a walk, and he always came back with a calm and happy mind to begin his day's work. His wife wondered where he went in his walks, but he never spoke to her of the matter. One morning she secretly followed him. He went straight to the tree from which he first saw the Lord. Hiding herself, she watched him to see what he would do. He took a pitcher, and, carrying water, he poured in about the tree's roots, which were getting dry in the sultry climate. He pulled up some weeds here and there. He passed his hand fondly over the old trunk. Then he looked up at the place among the branches where he had sat that day when he first saw Jesus. After this he turned away, and, with a smile of gratitude, went back to his home. His wife afterward referred to the matter, and asked him why he took such care of the old tree. His quiet answer was, "It was the tree which brought me to Him whom my soul loveth."—Immanuel Messenger.

A SWARM OF BEES.

A swarm of little busy bees
  Are buzzing in your ear;
Just stop, and think, and listen, please,
  And every one you'll hear.

Be regular at Sunday school;
  Be in your class on time;
Behave the very best you know;
  Be sure to bring your dime.

Be thoughtful while your teacher speaks;
  Be cheerful, be content;
Be kind in thought and word and deed;
  In prayer be reverent.

Why Roy Would Not Go.

Many books have been written about dogs, and many interesting stories have been told about them. Children like to hear all kinds of stories if they are told in an interesting way, and they seem especially fond of animal stories.

"Tell us a story, Uncle Phil," said Bob and Archie, running to him. "What about?" said Uncle Phil, as Rob climbed on his right knee and Archie on his left. "Oh, about something that happened to you," said Rob. "Something when you were a little boy," added Archie.

"Once when I was a boy," said Uncle Phil, "I asked my mother to let Roy and myself go and play by the river. My mother said yes, so we went, and had a good deal of sport. After a while I took a shingle for a boat and sailed it along the bank. At last it began to get into deep water, where I couldn't reach it with a stick. Then I told Roy to go and bring it to me. He always did as I told him, but this time he did not. I began scolding him, and he ran toward home. Then I was very angry. I picked up a stone and threw it at him as hard as I could."

"Oh, Uncle Phil!" said Archie. "Just then Roy turned his head and it hit him over the eyes." "Oh, Uncle Phil!" cried Rob. "Yes, it made him stagger. He gave a little cry and lay on the ground. I did not go to him, but waded into the water for my boat. But it was deeper than I thought. Before I knew it, I was in a strong current. I screamed as it carried me down the stream, but no man was near to help me. But as I went down under the deep water, something took hold of me and dragged me toward the shore. And when I was safe on the bank I saw it was Roy who had saved my life."

"Good fellow! Was he your cousin?" asked Rob. "No," replied Uncle Phil. "What did you say to him?" asked Archie. I put my arms around the dear fellow's neck and begged him to forgive me." "What did he say?" He said, "Bow, wow, wow!" "Why, who was Roy, anyway?" asked Archie, in great astonishment. "He was my dog?" said Uncle Phil, "the best dog I ever saw. I have never been unkind to a dog or any other animal snce, and I hope I never will be."—Reformed Church Messenger.

No Redress for Drunken Motorists.

A legal ruling, which has been upheld by the highest court in Canada, is that no redress may be secured from insurance companies by motorists for accidents if it is found that such persons were driving cars while intoxicated. A similar ruling in the United States would do much to reduce the accident insurance rates of motorists who abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor while operating automobiles.—The Christian Sun.

The Christmas season is fast approaching, shall we in comfortable homes and in many cases bright children's faces around us, not remember the Leper and his needs? A Hot Dinner is given them, with meat only once, on Christmas Day, then the presents are opened, the sweaters, scarfs, and things sent by kind friends, don't you know that it makes them happy to realize that we care? It takes so little to give them this joyous day!

This litle poem was written by a Japanese when their church was completed:

"Bright lights are beaming in our House of Prayer,
(The little church
Given by friends
From other lands),
And childish faces bend in ecstasy
Above their sleeping dolls with golden hair!"

IMPOSSIBLE TO RECEIVE THEM.—"The other day Nai Dee brought his wife, Nang Kao and his two children to see me. His wife has been a leper for several years and the two children, about four and six years of age, were underfed and emaciated. The father had been unable to make a decent living for some time. His neighbors shunned him, no one would give him work, and finally in desperation he came to the asylum to ask us to care for his family. The children were examined and found to be untainted, but obviously in need of good food and treatment for other conditions. It was impossible for us to receive them. The asylum is now overcrowded and there are no funds to care for newcomers. We are barely able to feed and clothe our present numbers. These two children, living without sufficient food and in close contact with their highly infectious mother, cannot hope long to escape the terrible consequences. Sixty dollars would care for these two boys for one year, restore them to normal health and enable them to have the ordinary benefits enjoyed by other children.—J. Hugh McKean, Chiengmai, Siam."

sponsored in various sections of the diocese by the department, the clergy of the regions, and in one case a single parish, with the assistance of the department. In Detroit six weekly sessions are held on Tuesday evenings in St. Paul's Cathedral. This series will close on November 26, and at the present time there are about 275 enrolled. In the Flint region five sessions will be held monthly, rotating among the parishes in that region and closing on February 19. Mr. William Pattinson, of St. Paul's, Flint, is chairman, and to date the enrollment is fifty. The Saginaw-Valley Normal will open on November 25, and will hold five monthly meetings, also rotating in the region. The Rev. Harold McCausland, of Bay City, is chairman. And in St. Paul's Church, Jackson, an annual Seminar is carried out for the parishes of the region by the Rev. Charles L. Ramsay, rector, with an average attendance of eighty. Hundreds of Church people are reached every year through these Normal Schools, and the desire for them and appreciation of them seem to be increasing as time goes on.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop.

Services and Quiet Day of Prayer.

Bishop H. J. Mikell took part in the annual Armistice Day service held at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta, Sunday, November 10. The service is sponsored by the Reserve Officers' Association, of which Canon William S. Turner is chaplain.

Throughout the diocese the Quiet Day of Prayer was observed on Monday, November 11, when women gathered for prayer and meditation in all the churches.

The Rev. Louis C. Melcher, rector of St. John's Church, Knoxville, Tenn., will begin a week's series of services on THE FORWARD MOVEMENT at Holy Trinity Church, Decatur, Sunday evening, November 17, as announced by the Rev. Charles Holding, rector.

King's Daughters Meet.

The Local Assembly of the Daughters of the King met at St. James' Church November 12 for a Corporate Communion, at which the Rev. Charles E. Wood was celebrant. A business meeting and luncheon followed. Miss Nana Tucker, President, presided.

College Student Workers Meet.

Dr. Theodore O. Wedel, Secretary for College Work, held conferences in the diocese from November 7-11, meeting with Dr. W. W. Memminger, Atlanta, who works among the students at Georgia Tech; Rev. Charles Holding, Decatur, who contacts the students at Agnes Scott College and Emory University; Rev. David Cady Wright, Jr., and Miss Louise Starr, Episcopal College Student

Personal Notes

The Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Judge, rector-emeritus of the Church of St. Matthew and St. Timothy, New York City, is supplying at the Church of the Resurrection, New York City, until a new rector is called to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of the Rev. Edward Russell Bourne.

The Rev. Ernest E. Piper, senior assistant at St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City, has resigned to become rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa. He will assume his new duties on December 1.

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Bernard McKean Garlick, a member of the staff of Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore, has been called to St. Alban's Church, Centredale, Rhode Island, to take the place made vacant by the resignation of Rev. James M. Duncan, new rector of Church of the Ascension, Auburn, Rhode Island.

Mr. Garlick has accepted and will begin his new duties on December 1. Mr. Garlick was born in Smithport, Pa., December 14, 1908. He was graduated from Hobart College and from the General Theological Seminary in May, 1933. In June of that year he was ordained deacon by Bishop Ward, and raised to the priesthood in January, 1934, by Bishop Helfenstein.

The Rev. William S. Turner, canon of the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip and rector of the Church of Our Saviour, Atlanta, has accepted a call to become rector of St. Paul's Church, Winston-Salem, North Carolina. The Diocese of Atlanta regrets exceedingly its loss, but is delighted for the canon. He, with his family, will move to Winston-Salem about December 12.

The Rev. Lindsay O. Duvall has accepted the rectorship of St. John's Church, Pittsburgh, and Trinity Church, Sharpsburg, effective October 15.

The Rev. Francis C. Reynolds, of St. Louis, Mo., canonically resident in the Diocese of Springfield, has accepted a call for one year to St. John's Church, Versailles, Ky., effective November 10. The Rev. E. W. Baxter, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, has conducted services in the parish since September, 1934.

Ordination.

The Rev. Irwin H. Bauder was advanced to the priesthood on Saturday, October 26, in St. Michael's Church, Waynes Township, Pa., by Bishop Mann. Mr. Bauder served his diaconate in charge of St. Michael's, Wayne Township, and St. Mary's Church, Red Bank, Pa. He was presented by the Rev. W. F. Shero, Ph. D., and the Rev. F. C. P. Hurd The Rev. Louis L. Perkins preached the sermon. St. Michael's Church, Wayne Township, is the largest rural church in the Diocese of Pittsburgh. The church was filled with communicants from all parts of the county and a large number of the clergy from the diocese.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"There is no need for sad despair,
When God is shining everywhere."

The liberty of the other man is the front-line trench of our own liberty.
—David R. Williams.

"Prejudice is a recluse, living behind the closed doors of the heart."

In discussing the question of immortality, it must be remembered that God's integrity is at stake, for the belief contrary to immortality is a direct claim that there is no rationality in life.
—Ralph Harlow.

It is magnificent to grow old, if one keeps young.—Dr. H. E. Fosdick.

What does the Church stand for? It stands to offer men Christ; to tell men that way of life is possible by which they become sons of God; that life can be victoriously lived; that Christ offers a reinformed personality, an inward serenity, an infectious gaiety, an outgoing love which would invite the whole world not into a system of belief primarily, but into an experience which spells the mastery of the art of living.

The test as to whether Christianity is operative in industry must surely be the reaction on the lives of those engaged in it. If the final result is the creation of fear, anxiety or uncertainty, whatever the immediate material results may be, the motive power is un-Christian.—Angus Watson.

Protestant religion is evangelical or nothing. It may be liberal or orthodox in its formal definitions, but it has no meaning except as it brings men face to face with God as revealed in Jesus Christ, with all that that momentous confrontation implies for the conscience and the will. There can be no place for preaching, at all events, in a church which does not believe that Christ's religion is indeed a gospel: good news of the nature and the will of God, good news of the way to attain communion with God, and to find liberation from sin and fear.—Ernest H. Jeffs.

Go on in all simplicity; do not be so anxious to win a quiet mind, and it will be all the quieter. Do not examine so closely into the progress of your soul. Do not crave so much to be perfect ,but let your spiritual life be formed by your duties and by the actions which are called forth by circumstances. Do not take overmuch thought for tomorrow. God, who has led you safely on so far, will lead you on to the end. Be altogether at rest in the loving holy confidence which you ought to have in His heavenly Providence.—St. Francis de Sales.

Those who make Christian truth prevail must believe it; they must be willing to stand for it, paying the price of their fidelity. If the Great Commission is ever fully obeyed in all the earth, there must be a world-wide, powerful, abiding public sentiment created by those worthy to be His disciples.

Let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.—George Washington.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

Thanksgiving Day

Come, ye thankful people, come,
Raise the song of harvest-home;
All is safely gathered in,
Ere the winter storms begin;
God, our Maker, doth provide
For our wants to be supplied;
Come to God's own temple, come,
Raise the song of harvest-home.

All the world is God's own field,
Fruit unto His praise to yield;
Wheat and tares together sown,
Unto joy or sorrow grown
First the blade, and then the ear,
Then the full corn shall appear
Grant, O harvest Lord, that we Wholesome grain and pure may be.

For the Lord our God shall come,
And shall take His harvest home;
From His field shall in that day
All offences purge away;
Give His angels charge at last
In the fire the tares to cast,
But the fruitful ears to store
In His garner evermore.

Even so, Lord, quickly come
To Thy final harvest-home;
Gather Thou Thy people in,
Free from sorrow, free from sin;
There, forever purified,
In Thy presence to abide
Come, with all Thine angels, come,
Raise the glorious harvest-home.

"Vestries" of Colored Missions.

Mr. Editor:

I note with interest the article, "Vestries" of Colored Missions, by Dr. Bragg, in the November 2, issue. We agree that the use of the term "Vestry" in any Mission Church is inappropriate and not conducive to progress on the part of those who make up these "Vestries".

However, we do not believe that his solution of a problem which is so vital can be favorably indorsed by the more intelligent Laymen of these Colored Missions nor by the well thinking clergy. Competent Negro laymen are available for the work, and we need not encourage the appointment of White laymen on "Local Committees" of these Missions for two reasons:

1. It would be inconsistent with the policies current today in that Negroes are never considered for similar positions in white Missions, and

2. We do not believe the constituency of these churches would be induced to support such action without confusion and dissatisfaction.

The conditions which exist, financial, social and spiritual among the Negro work is due to the dire need of direct personal supervision of the work by Negro clergy. No church responds favorably to one or two services a month, and denied all other contacts and assistance of the priest. One man cannot render true laudable services to the mission, diocese, or general Church if he is called upon to serve more than two. Think of a man serving four and five missions! What can he do? The people are denied the proper training in the doctrine, discipline and worship of the church, and many of them are ignorant of the part they are expected to play in helping the National Council to carry out its program. What the Negro churches need are:

1. Resident clergy, who will give their time to the churches and teach the people what to do and how.

2. They need to be taught the laws, doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church as laid down in the Canons, and Prayer Book.

3. The children and young people need the personal contact and instructions of the clergy, to help them to become better and true Churchmen.

4. The Negro clergy need better salaries to enable them to carry out the work of the Church. They need to be reminded of the importance of living up to their oath of office.

In many instances Negro clergy are forced to resort to secular work to gain support, which should not be. In many places Negro churches are being served by White priests. Since Negro priests are never expected to serve white congregations (which of course would be inconsistent with present-day policies, and they do not have any desire to serve them), we do not feel that the opposite should be permitted.

Finally then, let the bishops appoint six men (Negroes) and the priest in charge as a "Local Committee" in all mission churches. Reduce the present load of rural clergy, permitting them to confine their activities to not more than two missions; see that they are properly supported, and then demand results.

An Interested Churchman.

On the Importance of a Sense of Humor.

Mr. Editor:

The fact has been cited that we never think of humor in spiritual matters because there is an innate feeling that there is something malicious about a sense of humor. Psychologists have a theory that the origin of humor involves the pugnacious impulse, a feeling of being superior to the occasion. But a sense of humor with the proper background of intelligence and culture is far removed from such crude beginnings and becomes a combination of traits and capacities that becomes almost a philosophy of life. The first essential is a large, shrewd yet benignant view of life with the ability to stand aside and contemplate one's self and one's mishaps in the same way we see those of our fellow beings. It exposes stupid narrowness and stimulates wholesome enjoyment of a keen appreciation of the ever-present foibles in human nature. Before considering its spiritual value, humor must be distinguished from sheer frivolity, clownishness and thoughtless ridicule. Even in Holy Scriptures we are told to rejoice and be glad which means that life is not to be taken too seriously after all.

A sense of humor is not an end in itself. It is not a stolid virtue that stands alone, but rather a brightly shining coat of gloom-proof enamel that shows off rugged virtues to advantage. Like a shock-absorbing device, it should not be confused with the wheels or the engine. Trivial in its manifestations, a sense of humor should not be studied too critically because when viewed apart from its special purpose it is like a removed mainspring without apparent usefulness. Between profound theology and the superficial religious experience of the multitude who find the world entirely too much with them, there is indeed a great strain upon the serious observer's sense of religious unity, unless he finds solace in that dictate of a sense of humor whereby too much is not demanded of one's own understanding.

Among the important uses of a sense of humor is its efficient assistance in combatting the danger of self-righteousness and sanctimoniousness that are best discovered when seen from the outside. Faith needs a sense of humor to perfect its work. If the individual takes himself so seriously that the inevitable storms of life become his responsibilities and the imponderable mysteries of life become his problems, there is no room for faith. A sense of humor generates the smile with all its wholesome spiritual attributes of genial, human understanding. It also reacts within the individual in a warm glow of well-being that prepares the way for such spiritual qualities as thankfulness and tolerance. Like the prism, humor breaks the colorless rays of many abstract virtues into rainbow hues of understanding by some helpful analogy expressed in everyday language. It is one thing to be told to be cheerful. It is another thing to think of gloomy, grouchy people as ill-mannered guests in God's world, fretting and pouting like petulant children who have not learned to play. In spiritual matters there are many massive conceptions of abstract virtue that seem cold and cheerless without the ivylike tendrils of humor to relieve the austerity. Again, it is human to err, to be discouraged and elated at the caprice of moods. A sense of humor is like the break in the structure that engineers deliberately include to permit expansion and contraction without damage. We are but the im-

Thanksgiving.

The spirit of the American people has too often been manifested badly in the attitude towards Thanksgiving Day. Having been a pioneer people greatly in search of material prosperity, we have thought of Thanksgiving as a time for thoughts of material reward alone. That the result has been just another holiday with the main emphasis on foot-ball is understandable.

With the spirit of our Book of Common Prayer, we have a real lesson to teach the American people, for Thanksgiving is not a day, but a definite part of religious practice, and when we emphasize our correct tradition in this way, we make a real contribution to the country.

A rector in Texas, realized that though his people were in every way dependent upon the cotton crop, they never celebrated a day of Thanksgiving except to go to a football game. Very kindly he offered his church service as one for the whole community. A Baptist preacher was invited and all the ministers who would come, were given a place in the processional. The hour was advanced to nine-thirty to let the congregation have the day for holiday. But it was successful and today that community realizes, as otherwise it never had realized, that people need the religion of Thanksgiving Day more than anything else.

In every life there is the temptation to take blessing for granted and to remember tragedies. Every year during the depression, a good many rectors have been asked by people what there is to give thanks for. Only tragedies and sadness linger in the memory. And yet, we have been most singularly blessed. Most of our tragedies have been because of our own selfishness. Most of our poverty has been because we did not have the brains or the grace to work out a better method of distribution. The Lord has provided, but we have greatly abused His gifts.

So Thanksgiving Day comes home to us as an opportunity to realize our own faults, and at the same time, with a better knowledge of God and His blessings, to work, study and plan for a better civilization here on earth. Above all, it emphasizes the truth that at the end of all worship should always be the note of thanksgiving.

Though our Church is small in numbers, we have a noble heritage to share with our communities. Let us not try to be exclusive with this heritage. Let us have a service we can share with the community in general, and to which we can invite our religious neighbors of other Christian names. Let us use the heritage to teach people the deeper and truer meanings of thanksgiving that go beyond and above cheap material blessings.

Revive the Church Congress.

As we are writing, there is in progress a meeting of a group of men of all different schools of thought to consider ways and means of reviving the old and useful Church Congress. We hope and pray that they may succeed in plans for revival.

In England, it has seemed possible to have a strong Catholic Congress, a well attended Liberal Evangelical group, and several other conferences and yet have a well attended and influential Church Congress. Why our Church Cangress had to come so near failure is a mystery, unless it was the fact that in the enthusiasm for new programs, those who should have taken firse interest in the Church Congress were diverted in interest elsewhere.

We have long stood for the civilized method of discussing our differences rather than fighting about them. In the Church Congress in more than fifty years we gave to the religious world an example of how this could be done. Many Christians of other names than our own attended and marveled that men of such diverse opinions in one Church could meet peaceably and discuss the basic things that caused differences and yet even inspire one another. We well remember one meeting where we had the privilege of being on the program. "The other side" was represented by one of the most advanced Anglo-Catholic bishops in the Church. Every morning we breakfasted together and talked over the papers that we were to read on the last day of the Congress. The newspapers may have made much of our differences, but we enjoyed and really had Christian fellowship.

No matter how stimulating an Anglo-Catholic Congress might be, and regardless of the great good that might be found at a meeting of Liberal Evangelicals, the Church Congress gave an inspiration in a united way of the Spirit of Jesus Christ entering the minds of men and enabling them to learn from one another. That a group is interested in reviving this organization along constructive lines and with a more up-to-date approach is as good news as we have heard since The Forward Movement came into being.

We need witness to the great genius of our Church which is the ability to be a home for all schools of thought. The Church Congress gave such a witness and it is possible to have again the enthusiastic meetings that attracted the great heroes of our church throughout the last fifty years. It must not be a party organization and if true to its ideal it will not be. But we do need it and its emphasis upon scholarship and culture and understanding. If our Church does not to give such a witness, it may appear to me only as a small bickering sect. With a great Congress we show ourselves true and real Catholics.

Who Can Speak?

Mr. Editor:

I am sending you this letter with a good deal of hesitation, but feel it ought to be said, and since no one else has undertaken to say these things, I thought I should do it. I received many letters recently about the letter I wrote to your paper, and all commended it most heartily, one from dear Bishop Gailor, in which he declared that I was exactly right in what I had said. Some clergy in high positions wrote also and said: "I was in a position to say these things, but they were not," all of which I think is not so. If a man like the rector of Trinity Church, New York City, would say these things it would make an earthquake and would do a lot of good. My position, or lack of position, does not carry the weight that, coming from others, it would carry. I have written all the bishops who resign, to congratulate them on their good sense, and told them that I resigned from the Galilee Mission, Philadelphia, sixteen years ago and gave as my reason that I wanted to do it while I had sense enough to. Some bishops wrote to thank me and say they agreed with me. Some were as silent as the people in the cemetery. Selah. I appreciate the privilege of saying these things through your columns.

The Calendar.

Mr. Editor:

We were delighted to see your plan for the New Calendar in the Southern Churchman last spring. We hope it awoke sufficient interest to accelerate the work. May we offer some suggestions?

In all these matters the Church has wandered very far from the Bible. The first chapter of Genesis gives us a good "start": "First day, second day, third day" and so on. One body of Christians (the Quakers) use this form today. Who thinks that Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and the other days can be pleasing to the Lord, named, as they are, after false gods. Surely when we consider this we must confess that "to us belongs confusion of face", as says the Prophet Daniel. Is it any better with the months? We are glad to see the New Calendar proposes thirteen months, and is very cleverly arranged in allowing for the extra day of the Leap Year as well as the extra day of the year, but the position of the Sabbath as the first day of the week is as unthinkable as it is in our present calendar, which, while seeming to honor the Day of Resurrection, is in truth an act of disloyalty. "All day long have I stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people." The command was to work six days and rest the seventh, and how much more reasonable this would be than our present plan of resting on the first day and working six.

Is it not true that "God works in a mysterious way"? Through His manipulation of the sun and moon at the Battle of Beth-Horon (Josh. 10:12 to 14) and the same miracle repeated on the Dial of Ahaz in the reign of Hezekiah (2 Kings 20:8 to 11), making a change of one whole day in the measure of time, the Sabbath was moved one day forward. We, therefore, are keeping the right day, though boldly proclaiming that we are not. Perhaps like the second son in the Parable who said, "I go not", but afterwards repented, we may agree to give the Sabbath its correct place in the Calendar and call it the Seventh Day, the year for making this change to be chosen by the same mathematicians who worked out this delightful solution of the difficulty in the Southern Churchman.

Educational Program for Miners.

Mr. Editor:

For the past four years field workers of the American Friends Service Committee have been living with the people and their problems in the coal fields of Eastern Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky and West Virginia. They have been moving forward in progressive experiments in rehabilitation—first, emergency child feeding and clothing relief, then trade training, and now adult education and adjustment in human relations. The Federal Council of Churches is giving active cooperation in this program.

One of the most encouraging aspects of the work is the fact that keen, alert young coal miners are constantly being discovered by our Friendly Advisers, who are helping to train them for possible future leadership in their communities.

The sad death of one of these outstanding men, Charles Murray, a young union miner, throws into high relief the significance of his own comments last spring at the closing exercises of the adult education classes begun by our workers and carried on by a representative local committee under the title of "The People's University":

"Many people look upon education as a means of enabling them to get better jobs. As a result of the classes this winter, I have come to realize that education is not simply for the purpose of helping us hold down our jobs, but to draw us out, to help us get more out of life, and to help us make the industry and the community better places in which to work and live."

If industrial relations in the coal industry are to be lifted from the type of feudal relationships which have characterized them during the past two decades, it will be done by the development of a high type of leadership among both operators and miners who are resolved to make mining a better job to work at and mining towns better places in which to live.

Help is urgently needed to make possible the continuance of this educational and leadership program this fall and winter. Contributions may be mailed to Olive Van Horn, Treasurer, Coal Areas Committee, Room 612, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York.

Industrial Secretary Federal Council of Churches.

St. Barnabas Guild.

Mr. Editor:

St. Barnabas Guild, a strictly interdenominational organization, was founded in the Episcopal Church for nurses. Its purpose is for the furtherance of Christian unity and spiritual growth, and for the uplift of one's fellowman. The name was chosen for a nurses' guild because St. Barnabas was the "Apostle of Love" and one of the sweetest characters in the Bible.

St. Barnabas was a friend to the misunderstood man, St. Paul. They became co-workers and together founded the first Christian Church at Antioch. He was a friend to the man who failed, John Mark, and by his love and friendly spirit he brought John Mark to Christ. He was a friend to the new enterprise of the Church, and with the little band at Antioch set out to spread the gospel of love and service. He was a friend to good causes and to people. The Church feels that every true nurse is an "Apostle of Love", that her mission is one of loving service done in His name, and that by her noble deeds and fine example some souls may be brought to Christ.

St. Barnabas Guild of St. James' Episcopal Church, Richmond, was organized in 1930, and as far as can be ascertained, is the only one in the South. Its members endeavor at all times to reach any nurse in distress and to render any aid possible. Also to contribute to the social and spiritual welfare of the nursing profession. Since the beginning of the organization several individual nurses have been assisted financially who otherwise would have had to appeal to the Nurses' Relief Fund.

Members of the Guild feel that to a nurse, probably more than to any one else, the opportunity is given to be a true St. Barnabas.

Spiritualizing Civilization

We have tried education, and I suppose never before in human history have such vast sums been spent upon higher education. But the results have not been as favorable as might have been expected, and civilization has never been in greater danger than it is at the present time. It is evident that something else is needed to guide us into a better and happier state of existence. We may take the human body as an illustration. It is, as the Psalmist once said:—"Fearfully and wonderfully made." Its various organs are arranged in such a way that they all work together in perfect harmony if the health and proper working of the whole is to be maintained. But this state of harmony can only exist when life is present throughout. When life ceases, the various organs cease to function and death ensues, which means the disintegration and dissolution of every part.

The Life Principle of Civilization.

It is the same with civilization. The spirit of man is the lifegiving principle which alone can keep it in health and promote its wellbeing by the harmonious working of its various parts. But the spirit of man is unable to perform this task unaided, and God, the Creator, has met this need by associating Himself, through the Holy Spirit, with the spirit of man for his guidance and through the reinforcement of a higher power than his own, to enable him to do that which he could not do by himself. Christianity has civilization in the hollow of its hand, as it were, because Christians have at their disposal all the means needed for the creation of the best and highest type of civilization possible in this present world.

The Need for Wisdom.

Education imparts knowledge, and an ever-increasing supply of it, but it does not necessarily give wisdom, and wisdom is one of the few absolute essentials in the creation of a high degree of civilization. Wisdom has been defined as, "the use of the most important means for the attainment of the best ends." Christianity gives us access to the highest possible kind of wisdom, the Divine Wisdom, and God is willing to impart this wisdom to those who will seek for it:—"If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." St. James 1:5.

Christ the Wisdom of God.

Christ came as the Divine Teacher to share the wisdom of God with us, and if His teaching had only been more closely adhered to, and His followers had been more faithful to Him, so-called Christian civilization would not have been in the condition existing today. His New Commandment set forth clearly and decisively the Law of Christian Brotherhood, and no more perfect way has ever been discovered of creating a perfect Social Order. "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." St. John 13:34-35. If wisdom is "to use the most important means to the attainment of the best ends," then true wisdom would dictate the course laid down by our Lord Jesus Christ in His New Commandment as the only way out of our present difficulties.

The Spirit of Wisdom.

But the Holy Spirit also came to teach the same truth, for St. Paul tells us that the first and most important fruit of the Spirit is Love, and it is His work within us to impart to us this greatest, this divine gift. For, "the Love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us." Rom. 5:5. And it is because the Love of God is thus shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, that our own love is kindled, and love to God and love to our fellowmen becomes possible and makes manifest that we are the sons of God.

The Great Stumbling-block.

The great trouble is that we Christians (to say nothing of the world) do not realize that Love is the life principle which alone can bring into harmony all the different types of humanity, just as the life of the body keeps all its various and manifold parts and organs working in unison. War will cease to be in the world when love and brotherhood between men and nations drives it from the earth, as when the light of dawn comes, the darkness of night passes away. But this great moral and spiritual revolution must begin with Christians themselves. It was said in the early days of our era:—"See how these Christians love one another." If that could be said now we should have a real Christian civilization, and the nations "would walk in the Light of the Lord," instead of in the darkness of suspicion and fear and even hatred, which prevails now.

Armor, Human and Divine.

So-called Christian nations are piling up armaments and weapons of destruction of every kind, when they should be putting on the whole armor of God. Until we put love first, as the essence of Christianity, and as the most important thing to be considered, the world will never know the real truth about the Christian religion. And the first and most important step to that end might well be for all Christians, of every race and nation and creed, to unite in a Pact of Christian Brotherhood, based upon our Lord's commandment that we should love one another; so that all men may know that we are His disciples.

Christ gave to His disciples a golden thread as a clue which when followed, would lead to His Kingdom. But we have dropped the thread of gold and are groping in the dark for some other clue which we imagine will do as well. But this is a waste of time and effort, for Love is the golden thread which runs through God's great work of creation, and His greater work of Redemption, and to fulfil the Divine Purpose and bring in the Kingdom of God, we must once more take this same clue and follow its guidance till we have reached the goal.

Then love shall like the sun bless all the earth,
And give to all mankind a second birth,
And yield to life its richest, noblest worth.

South Dakota Looks to Her Future

By W. BLAIR ROBERTS,

Bishop of South Dakota.

MUCH HAS been written and told of the Church's great work among the Dakota Indians, commonly known as the Sioux. The story of Bishop's Hare's unique and amazingly effective labors among this people is fairly familiar to our Church people in general. It forms one of the greatest chapters in the annals of our missionary endeavors. It furnishes the outstanding disproof, if one were needed, that the Episcopal Church in this country is not adapted to the needs of a people uncultured in the ways of modern life, and it takes away the alibi of those men, and there are many, who claim that we have no right to impose our particular brand of religion on people who already have a faith of their own, and for that reason they will not give to "Foreign Missions." Amid all the changes that modern life with its ever closer contacts with the White man has brought to these people, the knowledge of Jesus Christ and contact with Him through the means He Himself gave us is the greatest—I almost say the only—blessing of them all. When I first went to South Dakota over twenty-seven years ago, the old Indians used to say to me, "The soldiers stole our lands; the traders brought us fire-water; but white robe—the name they gave our Church clergymen—he brought us Jesus Christ." That tells the story in a nut-shell—Jesus Christ at that time their only blessing and today by far their greatest blessing. In two short generations practically the entire nation has been brought to Jesus Christ. Before Bishop Hare came in 1873, a few had been converted. Occasionally today an old man or woman comes to Holy Baptism. The main task has been accomplished within less than sixty years, the major part of it by this Church. All of which shows what can be done when the Church sets herself steadfastly to a task by giving generously of her prayers, her workers, and her alms. God bless it richly as our Lord promised He would.

A layman asks, "What kind of Christians do they make when you convert them?" My answer is that they make for the most part, at least as good Christians as White men do and often far better. They will travel greater distances and over worse roads to attend services than the great majority of White people are willing to do. They bring their entire family to Church, even their babies, which most White people are not willing, or do not dare, to do. The children might fuss and the babies might cry. They join more heartily in the service, especially in the singing, than most White congregations do. They are never in a hurry to leave Church after the close of a service as most White folks are. They love long services and enjoy long sermons, which most White people do not.

In the matter of giving, they give far more in proportion to their means, than most White people do. For instance, last year when Church people generally were giving less to the Church and calling on our leaders to retrench and cut down, or entirely abandon missionary projects, these people after going through one of the very worst years economically that South Dakota has ever known, increased their annual convocation offerings of the year previous by over thirty-three per cent. Had the entire Church kept pace proportionately with them, not only would not work have been abandoned, but there would have been a substantial advance along the Church's entire line.

THE CHURCH has about 9,000 baptized members among these people, with twenty-five native and seven White ordained clergy, one White deaconess, and two Church Army workers ministering to them. There are also over sixty native catechists and helpers, unordained men acting as lay readers at the different chapels. We have ninety-seven chapels in this great field located on the eight reservations in South Dakota and on the Santee Reservation in Northeastern Nebraska, which has always been attached to South Dakota for ecclesiastical purposes. Only three of these chapels are located on a railroad. A few of the other chapels are located in small inland towns and at government agencies. The rest, and by far the greater number, are situated out in the great open spaces with anywhere from three to one hundred and sixty acres of land connected with them.

This brings me to my object in writing this article, to show the enormous opportunities which lie before the Church if we will but take advantage of them. We are and have long been primarily an urban Church. That is one of our weaknesses, the opportunity lies before us, not in the far distant future, but in the comparatively near future, to develop in South Dakota the greatest rural diocese the American Church has ever known. I have described the present set-up, almost one hundred rural chapels, land, a large and devoted nucleus of Church people, and native missionaries. With this as a basis, consider the changes that are taking place in this Indian country. On a few of the reservations this change has already radically altered the complexion of the population to a large extent. The same thing is inevitable on the other reservations. You cannot keep the White man out of any country. With his coming, inter-marriage is bound to take place. There have been many such marriages out here already. There are bound to be many more in the future. With our large number of Indian Churchmen, hosts of such families should find their religious home in the Church and the Church should work in and through them for a cleaner, more wholesome community and national life.

Among those Whites who do not inter-marry, the Church has an equal opportunity and responsibility. Many of those people are calling to us for help. Not long ago every family within a radius of six miles of one of our Indian chapels petitioned me to send them a White priest to help them train their children in ways of godliness. I had to refuse their plea as I did not have the money with which to send the man. These people asked for life and the Church refused to give it to them.

At one of our chapels last year one-half of an unusually large class confirmed were White people. At another Indian chapel not long ago six White children were among the eight people confirmed. Not one of the Whites of those I have just mentioned had had previous contact with the Church, so far as I could learn. We are already doing on a small scale what is not only possible but inevitable on a large scale, if the Church will only realize her opportunity and responsibility, which are truly God-given, and make a supreme effort.

TO ADD to the picture, we have four educational institutions in the Indian field which are bound to have an effect on this country in the future as they have had in the past. St. Marys School for Indian girls is probably the highest standing school in the Indian country. It is fully accredited by the Department of Education of the State of South Dakota, a very rare distinction. Every member of its faculty is a college or university graduate and holds an academic degree. Our girls here are not only given the education required by the state, but are trained in home management and home-making in their various phases.

At Hare Industrial School on the Rosebud Reservation where we have a farm of about nine hundred acres, boys are taught vocations. Only two are possible now, farming and stock raising. We once taught them carpentry, but had to give it up, because of the cuts in appropriations. As soon as possible we want to add carpentry and also automobile repairing to their course. The aim of this school is to train boys for a useful life and to give them an occupation by which they may earn a living.

At St. Elizabeth's School and the Crow Creek Dormitory, the children are sent to White day schools nearby, thus making them accustomed to live and work and play with the Whites with whom they are to be associated in the future. Needless to say, the Church's influence and training at these four instituions is very great. From them are coming the leaders of the future, the fathers and mothers of the coming generations. Their importance cannot be over-estimated. In and through them the Church can wield a mighty power for good in the years that are to come as it has in the years that are past.

That in brief is the groundwork for the picture of a greater, more powerful rural Church in the South Dakota of the future as we see it now, a Church whose influence will spread from that state to strengthen and enlarge its work in other dioceses and districts. The vision is possible of realization, but as the spirit of high Christian adventure expressed by sacrificial giving was necessary in the past to prepare the basis for the present picture, so adventure expressed in a like sacrificial giving is necessary to realize the completer picture which we now see by faith. What will you do to help make real this God-given vision?

Life's Supreme Tests

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,

Bishop of Washington.

THERE come times when the ideals and convictions we hold are put to a supreme test. Under normal conditions we pursue our course unperturbed and confident in our security; our beliefs and our religious practices continue without inconvenience to us. When every condition is favorable and we find cooperation and cordial support in what we hold of faith, it is satisfying to enjoy our conceits and to follow our practice unlet and unhindered. It may be safely affirmed that adversity and prosperity test what we hold of religious conviction. The first frequently disillusions, disappoints and hardens us. The second enervates, softens and renders us susceptible to prevailing evil. There are those to whom adversity brings a fresh confidence in what they hold of faith and tends to enrich and strengthen them in the day of trouble. Observation indicates that an excess of prosperity, with its accompanying self-ease and self-gratification, lowers the moral tone and frequently issues in apathy and spiritual blindnesss.

There is an incident in the eleventh Chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel that illustrates what we have in mind. It is written that, "When John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples, and said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" When Jesus came to John for baptism, John declared, concerning Him: "Behold, the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." When he thus recognized Christ, his life was un-restrained and his ministry unrestricted. He was now in Herod's prison awaiting he knew not what. It was in this hour of his testing that his faith in Christ was for the time shadowed by misgivings. The prison walls had rendered him more introspective and it was in a period of profound depression that he sent a message to Christ, asking: "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?"

The forerunner's mental condition is suggestive of an experience that comes now and again to men and women under the stress of trying and exacting circumstances. There are many people in our modern world who, under the test which a changed and changing order imposes, experience misgivings and doubts concerning their religious convictions. The morale of the world has sustained a severe shock and one that has made deep inroads into its traditional faith and practice. It is a new testing time. If any one make his diagnosis of existing conditions by reflecting upon that which has issued from other and severe experiences, he is bound to believe that, once the present shadows are dissipated the world will come to a new day of stronger and finer religious conviction and a more sustained recognition of the teachings of Christ than it has ever known. The answer which Jesus sent to the questioning forerunner is a significant one. In it, He makes no reference to His convictions concerning the divine authority of His ministry. His message is, "Go and show John again those things which you do hear and see," and He bids the messengers to see in those whose lives He had touched, the salutary results of His ministry. He would thus prove His divine authority by creditable witnesses.

The implication of this is, that the proof of the value of Christian faith is disclosed in what it produces in changed lives rather than what it effects in bold affirmations. Harold Begbie's "Twice Born Men," the story of those whose lives had been transformed by the power of Christ is in demonstration of His prevailing and continuing presence in our modern world.

We are talking much today about the "forgotten man." Little is being said about the causes that have produced this phenomenan in our life. The forgotten man is the victim of a system that is inequitable and un-Christian, the direct result of a forgotten God. A forgotten God means the rule of selfishness, loose-living, industrial inequity and other vices that have invaded our individual and corporate life. There is little promise that the forgotten men and women of our day will experience adequate living conditions until the standards of our Christian profession are disclosed in more wholesome ways and practices, beginning with the American home and reaching out to every interest that concerns the more abundant life. Secretary Hull well expresses the need of the present hour when he says: "Present dangers challenge the Church to engage in what should be nothing less than a flaming crusade to improve conditions that have a dangerous aspect."

When we can show the world our faith by our works we shall be on the way to a better world.

The Aim of the Movement

By A. C. ZABRISKIE,

Associate Member of the Forward Movement Commission.

WHAT does the Forward Movement aim at? What do its leaders hope that members of the Episcopal Church will do as a result of it? The answer to those two questions depends on another. What is the function of the whole Church of Christ, and of any subdivision thereof?

I.

The Church, or any branch of it, exists to do Christ's work. Its raison d'etre is to do a job. It is not meant to be a field in which parsons walk but a force to Christianize the world.

To a good many folk the Church seems to be impotent, a spectator on the side-lines of life, with no bearing on the really important affairs of the world today. Studdert-Kennedy on his way to the front heard a sergeant say, "Wot the 'ell is the Church doin' 'ere?" and not a few business-men and politicians echo the question whenever it approaches their interests. A friend of mine, trying to dissuade me from being ordained, said, "A good dentist has more effect on life today than a parson, and the Rotary Club is a much more influential organization than any church." Why do so many outsiders have ideas like this? Why are so many churches composed nearly wholly of women? Isn't it largely because we men have forgotten that the church exists to do a particular job which bears on every phase of life, the job of remaking individuals and society into accordance with the mind of Christ? And forgetting that, we have allowed it to be often a spectator on the side-lines.

The church exists to be a point of contact between Christ and the World, to be a medium through which His influence can be brought to bear on the world, to give concrete earthly embodiment to His spirit. Just as a bulb reveals the power and warmth of that invisible force electricity, so the Church is meant to reveal the love and power and mind of Christ. This function bears on every phase of life. It involves being a medium through which Christ's influence can be made operative in homes, amusements, business, politics, international affairs, every aspect of human activity. To the extent that the Church is unrelated to the most important things in life of the world today, to that extent it fails to fulfil its function. To the extent that its attention is concentrated on itself and its own concerns instead of on the world it exists to save and to serve, to that extent it is un-Christian. If it is not a redemptive society it is not Christian. The Church exists to do Christ's work.

II.

The Forward Movement was born in the travail of the souls of men who saw how pathetically the Protestant Episcopal Church was doing its task—how it was losing influence over young people, how it was faltering badly in its efforts to take Christianity into areas of life where it was not acknowledged, areas geographical and social, how small a proportion of its membership attended corporate worship or had any part in its work, how much of its activity was trivial and not relevant to Christ's purposes, how frequently it was on the sidelines of life and content to be there. God wrought in these men's souls. He was leading mankind on to a new world, perhaps a new civilization. He had helped men to great discoveries in science, to great inventions; He wanted to help them learn how to use them and how to live together in peace, justice, prosperity. He was striding forward through human history and the great question that agonized those men was—Is the Christian Church, and particularly the Protestant Episcopal branch thereof, going with Him, or will He have to accomplish His purpose through other agents? They aroused the General Conventon to the situation. General Convention decided this Church must respond to God's call of "Forward." It appointed a commission to reinvigorate and rehabilitate the Church. It did not really know what it was doing, for under the terms of the resolution, the Forward Movement Commission was given practically despotic powers to dictate to dioceses and parishes. Many people urged it to use this practically papal authority. But Bishop Hobson and his colleagues knew that would do no permanent good. The only permanently valuable response to God's call "Forward" would be that of people who wanted to follow. The Church must become so loyal in its discipleship that its whole aim would be to learn and to do God's will; and that demanded that the people who make up the Church become disciples of Jesus in a far deeper and more thorough-going way than ever before.

III.

The aim of the Forward Movement, then, is a more loyal, better informed and more effective discipleship.

It aims at evoking a more loyal discipleship. It wants to make all of us face this question—Are you determined to regulate your life by the life and teachings of Jesus, and are you really trying to do that now? Are we? In view of our past record have we any right to be called Christians, disciples of Christ? Do we propose in the future to take His way as our way, His purposes as our purposes? Do we intend to let His goal and His standards control our political activities and business as well as our conduct at home? It wants to make us hear the summons Jesus addressed to Levi. Jesus did not ask Levi simply to reform his private morals and to contribute; He asked him to devote his whole life—time, abilities, energy, money—to Christ's job of revamping individuals and society by bringing them into accord with God's will—which involved revamping his own life first. So Jesus asks us today to devote our whole lives to His enterprise. Perhaps we are to work for that enterprise as newspaper men or politicans or merchants or farmers or garagemen or teachers. We can work for it in almost any occupation provided we use that occupation as a means of forwarding His aim.

If discipleship is to be effectively loyal it must be intelligent. One reason why so many of us can't claim to be following Christ is ignorance. We want to but don't know how. Our hearts are all right, but our heads are all wrong—and a soft head can do as much harm as a hard heart. Compare the thoroughness with which Church people understand what Jesus' objective was and His philosophy of life and how His principles apply to life in 1935 in the United States and what is the correct strategdy today for accomplishing his aims, with the understanding Communists have of the philosophy and aims of Marx and of the correct strategy for Marxists today. Their knowledge of the leader and of the philosophy and aims of their party puts to shame our understanding of Jesus and His society. Part of the blame for this lies with us clergy—we have not taught, our sermons have been exhortations, or have dealt with nearly every subject except that of making plain the mind of Christ. Part of it rests with the laity. They seem to think it made no difference if they knew what Christianity was all about or not; they seemed to expect to understand without working at it. The Forward Movements wants to persuade us to study. It would have us work seriously at the task of discovering more clearly what sort of life Jesus wanted His followers to live, what His objective, what it means to be a Christian today, what is the task of His Church. It would have us study at the great basic convictions on which our religion is based. It would have us learn, partly by study but chiefly by practice about the technique which experience has shown to be most conducive to the development of Christian character and activity, of which the primary features are meditation and prayer. It would have us get to know about the sort of self-discipline we need and then practice it.

It aims at a more effective discipleship. It wants us not only to be better informed, it aims at our making a more efficient use of our resources. Religion is no excuse for inefficiency. Spirituality has nothing in common with sentimentality. Love is not synonymous with easy-going carelessness. Love means concern for the highest welfare of others. If you truly love some person you want to make your service to that person as useful as possible. Spirituality means a life lived in fellowship with Christ, informed by His spirit. loyal to His purpose; and if one really is loyal to Him one wants to serve His will as efficiently as one possibly can.

Consequently the Forward Movement hopes to see a Church-wide inventory. Beside wanting each individual to ask "Where Am I? What is my knowledge of Christianity? My practice? Do I use the helps available?" etc., it wants to see each parish take stock of itself. Each congregation ought to be asking themselves—What is the job of this group? Are the activities of this group of Christians done properly and are they relevant? One of the chief reasons many young people drop away from their parish is that its activities seem irrelevant to the world's needs and their own; and contrariwise, perhaps the chief reason they have joined up in many lands, including our own, with Communist or Fascist organizations is that the latter seem to be dealing with matters really important for the local community and the world. Every parish ought to scrutinize every item in its program as carefully as business-men scrutinize the departments of their business. It ought to consider the public worship—is it suitable to this group? the preaching—does it inform about Christianity and lead to better Christian practice?—the Vestry—does it know its job and do it properly? the finances—are they properly raised and spent? The Church School—the pastoral work? the choir? the other organizations? And do all these together meet the needs of the members of the parish and the community where the parish is situated? And is fullest use being made of all available man power, either in specific parish organizations, or in other community organizations, working at things the Christian community believes to be right and necessary? The Forward Movement would rejoice to see done everywhere what was done in one large and important parish. The rector formed a committee of fourteen men and women, representative of every group, and asked them to examine everything connected with the parish. They did, beginning with the way the two clergy read service and one warden's efforts to run everything to suit his own taste, not overlooking the would-be lady popes, and the way some organizations' work was hamstrung by un-Christian jealousies and lack of love. Some of the suggestions reported back to the parish meeting were pretty drastic. They were received not as indictments against which people had to defend themselves but as valuable suggestions for making the life and work of that Christian group more Christian in spirit and more usefully arranged. The Forward Movement longs to see dioceses likewise try to examine themselves. In short, the Forward Movement longs for the day when all church groups, from the National Council down to smallest Church school classes, will test their every activity to see if they express the spirit of Christ, if they are relevant to Christ's purpose and the Church's task, to see if they are as efficent as possible.

IV.

What would the leaders of the Forward Movement like to see the members of a parish do? Let me briefly enumerate a few things without taking time to develop them.

Chiefly, and first far above all else, to become better Christians ourselves. Members of any parish can observe more thoroughly the Christian discipline of meditation and prayer and public worship; they can try to meet everybody they meet in the spirit of Jesus; they can read and think and study jointly; they can serve their fellowmen privately, through community agencies, through church organizations; they can use their jobs as a means for helping to make their community and world into the sort of society Jesus envisioned, a society organized on the family pattern and permeated by the family spirit of cooperation, mutual con. sharing.

We can engage in personal evangelism. We can persuade our friends to make acquaintance with Jesus as we see Him in the Gospels, to learn of Him, to follow Him, to associate ourelves with His followers so that His society may become a more effective agent for serving and saving the world. We can help them gain an understanding and appreciation of Jesus Christ, and then to translate that appreciation into loyal discipleship. That is the way Christianity spread at first. It is the way any vital movement increases its influence, through one person's commending it and what it stands for to another person. We don't hesitate to try to convert men to or from the New Deal. Why then are we so diffident about Christianity?

We can try to figure out honestly the implications of Christian principles for society. No one man can do it alone. It must be done. Christ aimed at a society remade, as well as individuals remade, by acknowledging God's sovereignty and giving free play to His influence. There is no such thing as a purely personal gospel. "Love" involves other people; it involves one's attitudes as buyer and seller, as boss and employee, as well as friend and father. The gospels contain lots of ideas utterly opposed to current ways—about loving enemies, doing good to those who hurt you. What do these mean, translated into twentieth century conditions? We all agree, probably, that Christianity and war are irreconcilable and that part of the Church's job is to work to get rid of war. What is the best way for individual Christians, parishes, the whole Church to work at ending war? What does the Golden Rule mean in business? What bearing has Christianity on my vote for or against the New Deal? We can try to figure out the social implications of Christianity, to apply them, to get others to do likewise.

We can make experiments in Christian living. We can form "Christian-Life-Experiment-Groups." To discover precisely what it means to be a Christian today demands more than abstract thought. Conditions are so altered that no one can tell another positively, "This and this only is Christian." It demands testing out our theories in practice. And it demands experiments not only by isolated individuals but by groups. The early church was precisely a "Christian-Life-Experiment-Group." Every parish today ought to be a group making experiments in order to discover the more Christian way. But many of them are too large, and lots of people are not interested. So within a parish there is need for those who are tremendously concerned about Christianity to associate together not only in common thought and worship and service but for joint experiments in Christian living.

We can get candid surveys made in our parishes and help develop a program of maximum usefulness.

We can use our influence to help overcome the inertia, the traditionalism, the ecclesiastical introversion that is such a drag in so many places. A parish concerned wholly with itself is not Christian; it is Christian only in so far as its attention, like its Master's, is on the world it should redeem. A parish controlled by traditionalism is not Christian: it is Christian in so far as, like its Master, it adapts its procedure to the needs of those it should serve. Many parsons are fighting a lonely fight against inertia, traditionalism, ecclesiastical introversion. The final result depends on the attitude of the laity.

We can serve in our parish in whatever capacity we are most needed—from washing floors to leading boy scout troops, from singing in the choir to being parish treasurer, or church school teachers. If there is no real need for us in a parish organization, we can express the Christian inspiration we derive from worship in some community service. But never forget that service in such specific organizations is less important than expressing our Christian vision in our ordinary business and social activities.

We can try to make our homes more Christian—by teaching the children and seeing they get properly taught in Church school, by bringing worship into the family life through family prayers, by permeating our family with a Christian spirit so that family activities will be controlled by and reveal the spirit of Jesus.

Conclusion.

Dominating the city of Rio de Janeiro is a two thousand foot mountain that rises from the centre, called Corcovado. Atop this mountain is a hundred foot statue of Jesus, visible from all over the city. The first morning we were in Rio there was a low-hanging mist, and as I looked for the figure of Christ I could not see it. Then a voice within said, "Look higher." I looked, and above the mist He appeared. One reason who so many of us have such a dim understanding of Jesus is that He is obscured by the mist of our own preconceptions and prejudices and passions. Look higher—and you will see Him.

One cannot ascend Corcovada, and from the eminence where Christ's statue is one can see the whole city in true perspective—the heights and the swampy place, the beautiful beaches and the slums. So our job is to rise, however arduously, to His height and see our fellow-men from His point of view. Strive by study and prayer and love to look out on the world through His eyes. Then come down from the moment of vision and in the routine tasks of every day live in the light of what you saw.

THE CRIPPLED MOCKINGBIRD.

By Frances Reubelt.

Look up! Behold that brave and gallant bird!
One tiny foot is gone. He can not hop and spring
Like other songsters, but no piteous thing
Is he. He knows his task is, undeterred,

To fill the air with song. His breast is stirred,
It bursts with rapture and on joyous wing,
Lameness forgot, he can but soar and sing.
He is a poet and he will be heard!

Surrender to the fates that wrought him ill?
Not he! The warm sun rides there in the sky.
The good earth grants her golden bounty still

And all her children's needs can satisfy.
Oh! Southland's gift of gallantry and song,
I love you, for you help me to be strong.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys

Woman's Auxiliary Executive Board Works for Peace

Among resolutions adopted by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Province of Sewanee at its recent Provincial Meeting in Lexington, Kentucky, are the following:

Whereas, Every effort is to be made to promote the United Thank Offering, be it

Resolved, That the Woman's Auxiliary of the Province of Sewanee in meeting assembled urge the use of the name United Thank Offering rather than the use of the initials "U. T. O." in public speech, writing, and on other occasions.

Whereas, The Woman's Auxiliary is primarily a missionary organization, and

Whereas, Christmas is the most significant feast of the Christian year, be it

Resolved, That each one of us here, as Auxiliary women and as Church women, feel our full responsibility to confine ourselves to the use of Christmas cards which will express some spiritual idea and to influence others wherever and whenever we have the opportunity.

Whereas, The National Executive Board of the Woman's Auxiliary in the face of critical conditions in international relationships have called upon the women of the Church to stand together in united action to work for the prevention of war, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the women of the Province of Sewanee here assembled, urge diocesan and parish officers to bring this message before the women in their dioceses and parishes and to request them to spend some time each day in home and church in prayer for peace.

Whereas, The greatest mission field of the Church is that of the children of the Church School, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Woman's Auxiliary cooperate in every way possible with the provincial Department of Religious Education and that each member of the Auxiliary do what she can in the Church School in the parish to which she belongs.

Questions Considered at Pennsylvania Conference.

Under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, a three-day Diocesan Conference for Women was held with marked success. Special classes for officers and for the different departments of work, was one of the features of the Conference. The work of one of the classes, that on the United Thank Offering, is reproduced here in outline, presenting the questions and problems as given out in advance to be considered at one of the sessions:

1. Have you ever felt totally inadequate for the work of presenting the subject of the United Thank Offering to the women of your parish?

2. Have you ever wondered just how to go about increasing your parish offering?

3. Have you ever felt that it was being left to you as a one-man job to put over in your parish and wondered how to interest other women in helping you with your work?

4. Have you wondered how to interest the women in your parish who: (a) do not attend meetings; (b) seldom come to Church service; (c) have never heard of the United Thank Offering; (d) do not like mite boxes; (e) are not interested in any form of Church work; (f) should be contributors but are not?

5. Have you considered the value of parish presentation services? How best to arrange for them? The cooperation of the rector?

6. Have you considered the use of the Blue Box as against giving once or twice a year by check?

7. What is Pennsylvania's standing in relation to the whole Church, and what goals might our Offering easily attain?

This session, held on October 30, the closing day, brought together treasurers, assistant treasurers, and others "intensely interested or only remotely interested" in the United Thank Offering, and gave helpful suggestions to new treasurers and new ideas to old-time treasurers. The session was planned especially for the discouraged, and the not-particularly-interested, treasurers, and was conducted by the diocesan treasurer.

On the closing afternoon, a discussion class was held on the subject, "American Neutrality in Present International Affairs: Will It Keep Us Out of War? Is Not the Prevention of War of Paramount Importance?" All attending the Conference were invited to attend these discussions, and the hope was expressed that similar groups would be formed in parishes or convocations throughout the diocese.

The Woman's Auxiliary arranged this three-day Conference instead of the former Educational Day, believing this would prove helpful to all parish leaders and workers in the various departments. All Churchwomen were invited to attend. The Rev. Dr. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, rector of Trinity Church, Boston, one of the leaders in the Forward Movement, delivered the Conference address on the subject, "The Church Going Forward."

Candlelight Service Held On All Saints' Day.

Children of a mission school in northern Rhodesia have an evening candlelight service on All Saints' Day. In the midst of white roses and crimson African lilies and ferns, a tall candle is lighted to represent our Lord who said, "I am the light of the world." Then other candles are lighted for those to whom He first showed the light, including St. Paul who carried it far. Then there are many smaller lights for the great army of saints and martyrs, with tiny ones for child martyrs. Then a candle for each child present, is lighted from the one tall candle.

PROVINCIAL MEETING TAKES FORWARD-LOOKING ACTION.

They sing, "Who are these like stars appearing" and have prayers of thanksgiving for all the saints, those known by name, and all others, and those still on earth. And last the names are read of those who have gone on during the past year from that school into the land of light. The service closes with singing "The Son of God goes forth to war." Going out after the service, they carry the lighted candles with them to their homes.

Rev. G. W. Gasque

CONFERENCE FOR CHURCH WORK OF THE CHINESE CHURCH MARKS ANNIVERSARY.

Kuling, China.—The first Conference for Church Work in the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui (Chinese Church) was held recently in Kuling, the famous mountain resort of Central China. This Conference was made possible by a generous gift from America thereby fittingly marking the one hundredth anniversary of the appointment of the first missionary from America to China. Six of the eleven dioceses of the Anglican Communion were represented with a total attendance of seventy-eight men and women, about 90 per cent of whom were Chinese and the remainder foreign missionaries.

Bishop of Honan Presides.

The Rt. Rev. Lindell P. Tsen, recently advanced by vote of the House of Bishops of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui from Assistant Bishop to Diocesan Bishop of Honan, was Conference Chaplain. Bishop Tsen conducted the daily morning hour of meditation and was a source of inspiration to all who heard him.

The courses offered for group study were not only of interest but were directly concerned with the problems confronting Christians of the present time. The discussions which took place showed that the young people of China (many of the delegates were college students and young teachers) are keenly aware of the problems facing China today and are seeking a Christian solution.

Subjects Discussed.

The following courses were offered, all of which were well attended:

Christian Belief—Rt. Rev. A. A. Gilman.

Voluntary Leadership—Rt. Rev. D. T. Huntington.

Missionary Enterprise—Rev. James Tsang, General Secretary of Board of Missions of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui.

Worship—Rev. R. E. Wood.

Methods of Young People's Organizations—Rev Newton Chiang.

Church Schools—

- Problems—Rev. D. P. K. Liu.
- Methods—Miss Etheldreda Fisher.
- Materials—Miss Mabel Nowlin
- Hand Work—Miss Margaret Monteiro.
- Christianizing the Home—Mrs. F. Crawford Brown and Rev. Stephen Tsang.

Christ and Society—Mrs. D. T. Huntington.

Church Music—Miss Venetia Cox.

This gathering of young people interested in Church Work from Central and North China under such able leadership has proved to be a most successful experiment and should do much toward advancing Christianity in China.

After four years and more of reduction and retreat the time for restoration and revival has surely come.

—Dr. Wood.

The National Council has announced that a trust fund has been established by a friend which will provide an income of $2,000 a year.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

Prayer for Japan.

O God, we pray for all those who do not know Thee and do not honor Thy Name. Bless, we pray Thee, Thy messengers at home and across the sea, who are trying to teach others about Thee. Especially do we pray for the Bishops and all Thy servants in Japan. Grant that by them all Thy loving purposes may be known, and through Thy grace be abundantly fulfilled, even the redemption of all the people which Thou hast promised through Thy Son, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHINESE SHOPKEEPER PLEDGES FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS AS THANK OFFERING.

Wusih, China.—There is in one of our country stations here near Wusih a faithful Christian of ten or twelve years standing. He is a very poor man in this world's goods. He and his wife support themselves by keeping a tiny shop where they sell such things as straw sandals, paper lanterns, coarse soap and such wares to peasants. This shop is so small that there is not room for a third person behind the counter.

Some years ago he apprenticed his children to learn some humble trades and they are now self-supporting. About two months ago he came voluntarily to the clergy here and said that the Lord had greatly blessed him. He could not have meant materially as some do, when they speak in this fashion.

He said that he had talked things over with his wife and they wanted to make a thankoffering and pledged himself then and there to give five hundred dollars to start an endowment fund for the support of the church here.

This of course was amazing to his hearers, because we know him to be the kind of man who means what he says and has never showed the slightest disposition to put himself forward in any way. But on further conversation he declared that he really wanted to do this and expected to be able to keep his pledge. He had already saved one hundred dollars on it and has turned it over to Mr. Yang to put on fixed deposit in a bank until such time as a committee shall be properly set up to manage such a fund.

Shanghai had more confirmations in 1934 than in sixty-one dioceses in the United States.

WOMEN OF SAN JOAQUIN PROVIDE FURNISHINGS FOR CHURCH IN ONE AFTERNOON.

Fresno, California.—It happened at one of the meetings of the Church Service League in a Mission center in this District recently. The president, Mrs. Fawn, was speaking:

"And now, ladies, having adopted our program of work for the year, there are one or two matters I want to bring to your notice. Our Church is without a flag, and I have been wondering whether we cannot afford to buy one. Personally, I like to see the national emblem in the chancel of the Church."

Mrs. Percey was immediately on her feet. "I have a suitable flag at home that I can spare, and I shall be happy to present it to the Church," she said.

"Then all we shall require will be a stand for it," Mrs. Fawn reminded them. "I have a stand and the Church is welcome to it," volunteered Mrs. Turkins.

"Well, that was easy, thank you," said the genial president, "but that is not all I have in mind. The runner from the rear of the Church to the chancel steps is badly worn. We should have a new one."

"Put me down for five dollars." It was Mrs. Forson's voice. "And you may look to me for another five," were the words that fell from Mrs. Byer's lips.

Yes, indeed, that is the way the women do it.

Diocesan Young People.

The Diocesan Young People's Committee will meet in the Church of the Good Shepherd, Reedley, on Friday and Saturday, November 1 and 2, to make arrangements for a general meeting of young people throughout the Diocese to be held probably November 25-27.

Bishop's Banner Contest.

The contest among the Church schools of the District for the Bishop's Banner will start with the first Sunday in November and close with the last Sunday in April. The rules to be followed are the same as last time, and the award will be made on the basis of regular attendance and number of teacher's meetings held.

For the purpose of the contest all pupils on the roll October 27 are entered, thereafter those absent for three Sundays in any one month are dropped for the succeeding month and new pupils are added the first Sunday of the month following their enrollment.

Plans for 25th Anniversary.

At the request of the Executive Council the Bishop has appointed the following Committee to arrange for the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the District and of his consecration as a Bishop of the Church. The Rev. Wm. E. Patrick, chairman; Dean A. W. Farlander, the Rev. Seth C. Hawley, Messrs. C. E. Wakefield, Jr., Chester Cree, S. W. R. Langdon, M. D. Mesdames J. Benson Wrenn, Stephen Ross and Mrs. J. S. Germain.

The Brother of St. Andrew has organized in a single year more than seven hundred groups for the study and discussion of Personal Religion.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

Life of St. Gregory

I.

In the early days of Christianity it was the custom to remember the date on which great men or women, left this earth in martyrdom or death. As time passed, so many days were thus set apart that there were none left. So when the Reformation came in England most of the saints' days were dropped. If we look in our Prayer Book we will find that the only saints' days we keep are those of New Testament Saints. These are marked on the calendar in red. But in the English Church they commemorate a number of others who are marked in black and are those called "Black Letter Saints." One of these black letter saints' day is March 12. It is dedicated to St. Gregory on whom our program tonight is based.

Gregory was born of a very noble and rich family in Rome. When he came of age he was made Senator and also Praetor, or chief magistrate of the city. Great things were expected of him. But one day he announced that he was giving it all up and becoming a monk. So he sold everything and entered a monastery. He was very popular and soon became the abbot.

At about this time the Tiber overflowed its banks, causing much suffering. Proper precautions not being taken to clean up when the water went down, a pestilence broke out. Gregory now led his monks out to fight the pestilence. They nursed the sick and buried the dead. Naturally this increased the popularity of Gregory so that when the Pope died of the pestilence, he was elected in his place.

Gregory was very modest and did not want to be bishop, so he wrote a letter to the Emperor asking him not to confirm the election. It was the custom at that time that no Bishop could be consecrated without the consent of the Emperor. But the mayor of Rome stopped the letter, and sent people to hunt for Gregory, for Gregory had hidden. They eventually found him in a cave in the country and brought him back and he was consecrated.

II.

But if Gregory did not want to be Pope, his actions, once he was pope, were such that he is classed as one of the greatest men that ever filled that high office.

To begin with, he started out to reform the morals of the clergy, saying that the Church should be pure if it was to preach purity to others. This task done, he began to build up the power of the Roman See. (The territory over which a bishop ruled was called his see.) There were many bishops who had quarreled with his predecessors, and these he made friends with. Then he did his best to bring back the heretics. These were they who did not believe as the Church believed. In this he had fair success.

Though modest personally, he was afraid of no one. On one occasion he had a controversy with the Emperor who had forbidden any soldier to enter the ministry. On another occasion when the Lombards came to attack Rome he led the resistance until it was impossible to do more and then he made peace with the barbarians.

He was at all times anxious to see that things were done in proper order. So when Pope John of Constantinople claimed to be "Universal Bishop," Gregory wrote him a severe letter rebuking him for his presumption. At this time there were five bishops that were called pope by the Church. They were the bishops of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch and Jerusalem. All were of equal authority in the Church. Gregory also wrote to the popes of Alexandria and of Antioch telling them they should give no bishop the title of Universal Bishop, and saying that if anyone took such a title he was the forerunner of Anti-Christ. To the Pope of Alexandria he wrote, "You are my brother in dignity. . . . I never shall glorify myself which shall strike a blow at the grandeur of my brethren."

When we think of Gregory leading armies, rebuking Emperors and calling other popes to task, it seems hard to realize that he was also a great musician, both writing and teaching music. It was a day when they believed in the saying "Spare the rod and spoil the child." In his last years Gregory was sick, so that he could not stand on his feet, but for many years they showed the couch on which he used to lie while teaching his choir boys to sing, and also the whip with which he would chastise them if they struck a false note or did not keep time. His work as a composer was so noteworthy that a whole school of Church music is called after him, the Gregorian Music.

III.

But the most interesting thing about him from our viewpoint is his connection with foreign missions. For on one occasion he was walking through the slave market while still a monk. A group of boys waiting for a purchaser attracted his attention. He asked where they came from and was told they were Angles. "They look like angels," he replied. He then asked if they were Christians. When he heard they were not, he bought them and undertook to train them, so that they might go back as missionaries to their own people in England. For some reason this plan was not a success. Gregory next asked permission of the Bishop to go as a missionary himself. This was granted and he set out. But word got around and a mob formed who made the Bishop send to bring him back.

When Gregory became pope he sent a monk by the name of Augustine to England as a missionary. Forty monks went with Augustine. Though he was a Roman, he was later consecrated bishop by French bishops. He thus carried the French line of bishops to England instead of the Roman line. When he landed in his field of labor, he did good work, but was sorely troubled by a number of things and wrote to ask Gregory about them. These letters are still in existence so that we can know just what were the ideas Gregory had.

Gregory's plan was outlined in a letter as follows: Augustine was to make his headquarters at London. There he was to consecrate twelve assistant bishops. He was also to send a bishop to York. This bishop, as the work grew, was to consecrate twelve other bishops. The plan seems a good one and if it had been followed it would have avoided trouble lated on. But Augustine evidently regarded it simply as a suggestion that he was at liberty to follow or not as he chose. Today such a suggestion from the Pope would be considered an order. But Augustine stayed at Canterbury, sent no bishop to York, nor did he consecrate the twelve bishops as his assistants. Nothing was said about this, so that we see that the terms in which Gregory addressed him showed how he felt towards him: "My most reverend and holy brother and fellow bishop Augustine."

He also asked Gregory what to do about the British bishops who would not accept his authority over them. Gregory replied: "We gave you no authority over the British bishops." Many other things he also wrote from which we may judge that the purpose of Gregory was the Episcopal Church, as it is today in foreign missions. This is that as soon as possible the people in the new country shall have their own self-governing Church, in no way dependent on or governed by the mother church.

So, to sum up, we may say that St. Gregory was an humble, brave, gifted, good and wise bishop in the Church of God.

Savannah, Georgia, District Meeting.

An interparochial meeting of the Young People's Division of the Savannah District was held in St. Paul's Parish House, Savannah, Ga., on Sunday evening, October 13. About 200 were present. Mack Barnes, vice-president of the Savannah District, presided; the minutes of the last meeting were read by Robert Belford, diocesan secretary and West Robinson, diocesan treasurer, made a financial report. June Kaufman, diocesan president, prosented the project for 1936, which is the erection of another hut for boys at Camp Reese. A moving picture taken of the summer activities at Camp Reese was shown and received most enthusiastically. Bishop Reese and Bishop Barnwell were both present and made short talks to the young people. It was announced that the Rev. Dr. Theodore O. Wedel, National Secretary for College Work Among Episcopal Stuudents, will be in Savannah November 19 and 20 to meet the young people of the Church, and that the annual convention of the Young People's Divisions of the Diocese will be held in Douglas, Georgia, the second week in May, 1936.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE BOOK OF LIFE, Edited by Newton Marshall Hall and Francis Wood. Published by The John Rudin Company, 1018-24 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Price according to the binding. In eight volumes. Local Agent, Rev. B. P. Nuckols, Sandston, Virginia.

This is a unique piece of work and of great value. It stands by itself, according to the reviewer's opinion. It is the Bible, both Old and New Testaments arranged in a most wonderful order for the use of home and school. It is so arranged that it covers all the grades or ages of children and youths. It is much more than a story of the Bible. It is the Bible itself, with all necessary contemporary historical and interpretative material that make the Bible a living, acting book of life; the most complete course of religious education we have seen.

Moreover, this work is more than a source book of Biblical information. It is a complete sacred art gallery. It contains practically all the masterpieces of art in reproduction that make Bible scenes and characters living to the eyes of children with many geographical references of Bible lands and manners. It also contains stories of hymns and religious songs we love. It begins with stories of the life of Jesus Christ not with old Hebrew stories. It is pleasing to notice this turning point in Christian education.

The book must be seen to be appreciated. We recommend this book as the best Christmas gift a parent or relative can give. S.

EARLY HISTORY OF VIRGINIA AND MARYLAND AND SEVEN CENTURIES OF LINES: By the Rev. Wythe Leigh Kinsolving, M. A., B. D. Published by himself. Pp. 54. Price, $1.

This is the most compact little volume of the origin and ramification of two of the oldest, and most distinguished of Virginia's families. It contains studies in Pre-American and Early American Colonial times and the people who pioneered those early settlements. The author has wrought a fine piece of work in his attempt to trace his genealogy back to something like seven hundred years, a task not easy for anyone, only for a student and analyst of genealogical records.

The author has searched records here and abroad and has put his findings in this book form which is a real contribution to the early history of Virginia and the country at large. A fine little book with fine information. It must be read to be appreciated.

The Cary and the Kinsolving families are here traced to their remote origin by one of their able and learned sons—the author of this book, which the reviewer has had the pleasure of reading. The historical allusions, savored with a fine humor add to the pleasure of reading this book; the material is enough to write a large volume. S.

THE TRUTH OF CHRISTIANITY: By Lieut.-Col. W. H. Turton. Pp. 525. Published by The Wells Gardner, Darton & Co., Paternoster Building, E.C.4, London, England. Price, $1.

This is a revised twelfth edition of Colonel Turton's fine old book, which was first published in 1895, and has undergone twelve editions, with sixty-five thousand copies. It is an examination of the chief arguments for and against believing the truths and claims of the Christian religion. It is highly argumentative and sound in its conclusions. The well-learned Colonel has the endorsement of all the outstanding religious magazines of all branches of the Church, even from agnostics. He faces all intellectual and moral difficulties bravely and without undue compromise. He reviews all the textual difficulties with a fine scholastic accuracy and sound information. The book is worth reading. It is quite analytical and stimulating.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION: By N. Bishop Harmon. Pp. 174. Published by The Macmillan Company, New York City. Price, $1.50.

The author of this fine book is a distinguished physician and a fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. His discussions point out clearly the good and evil claims both science and religion have made and are still making. This is done critically and with a pronounced mental honesty on the part of the author. The book reveals a knowledge of the chief minds in both the scientific and religious worlds. He discusses God, Man, the promises of Religion, such as answers to prayer, the miracles, freedom from ills, forgiveness of sins, life after this life, and so on. A good book with stimulating reading for all who seek the truth. The author inclines to give more credit to religious claims than to scientific in fundamental principles.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST: By James H. Todd. Art Paper. Pp. 128. Published by The Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Illinois. Price, 20c.

The Cross of Christ! How little it means to the average believer. The cost to the Victim; the value to the world; the essential part it plays in the destiny of every human being. Of what consequence? Shall we fall under the spell of a speaker who recently declared, "It matters not to me whether Jesus died in His bed or on the cross?" Shall we accede to the presumed answer to a questionnaire of a certain mission board, that the death of Jesus meant no more to him than the end of a life laid down in the service of others?

Certainly there is need of Mr. Todd's message. They are far afield who deride the faith in the redemptive nature of Calvary's sacrific. Any view we may take of the Bible, God's Word, and position we may hold as to the office of the Lord Jesus for the salvation of mankind, is inextricably united with His death as the Saviour of men.

The author presents us the varied aspects of this atoning work in a readable and convincing way. It should be a text book for young folks, who would give an answer to the "reason of the hope that is in them." The more mature in the knowledge of this mystery will receive heart-warming conviction of the truth.

Well may all Church folks regard with fresh appreciation the memorable words in the Consecration Office of the Holy Communion, "All glory be to Thee, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, for that Thou of Thy tender mercy, didst give Thine only Son, Jesus Christ, to suffer death upon the Cross for our redemption; who made there by His one oblation of Himself, once offered, a full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice, oblation and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world."

How this glorious truth may become vital in human experience is the author's responsibility to show.

THE TRIUMPH OF JOHN AND BETTY STAM: By Mrs. Howard Taylor. Art Paper. Pp. 125. Published by The China Inland Mission, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Price, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

When Mark Twain wrote contemptpously of "meddling missionaries" he betrayed lamentable lack of true perspective, as indeed do all superficial observers. In a recent article by a Hindoo, whose concept is an amalgamation of the two religions into a harmonious whole, he too, fails to obtain the real touchstone of Christian missions.

Dedicated missionaries go to the fields beyond because they have a blessing they learn to share with others. And that blessing is the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Saviour of the world, through the sacrifice He made on Calvary's cross. No other so-called religion presents this front. We are reminded of Stanley Jones' fine aphorism: "Christ is not a good way, a better way, the best way. He is THE WAY."

That was the conviction of John and Betty Stam. Living by faith on God's care as members of the China Inland Mission, they had but one aim, to show forth the love of God to a lost world and to declare the gift of His Son for its redemption.

Mrs. Taylor, wife of a son of the founder of this mission, the universally known, Hudson Taylor, delineates in fine and sympathetic diction, the life and sacrifice of these two valiant soldiers of the Cross, who fell a prey to the misguided Reds of China. The heroism, the calm, the utter surrender, even to leaving their precious daughter to what mercy she could find, witnessed to the reality of their faith. Happily, Chinese Christians cared for the baby, now in safety and with life before her which will undoubtedly be laid at the feet of the Lord Jesus as a living sacrifice

Life is much; and going on is a joy when the springs are touched with the zest and zeal of a really Christian experience. But to face death as did these cherished children of God, is indeed, as Mrs. Taylor has designated, a triumph.

THANKSGIVING.

Georgie Tillman Snead.

O Light, that shone through darkness dense,
The glory of the Holy One,
To Thee we come, adore Thy Name,
The victory Thou hast won!

We pray that all the world may know
Thy wondrous grace and power,
And look to Thee for needed strength,
In every trying hour.

Thou art the Maker of the worlds
That glitter in yon sky,
Orion bright, and Arcturus,
Whose majesty stands on high.

Thou art the Builder of this frame,
The Architect of heaven.
We thank Thee for these radiant hosts
And all Thy blessings given.

For all the beauty and the grace
We would proclaim Thy love;
And bless Thee for this earthly home,
And for Thy Home above.

The Spirit of Thanksgiving.

W. H. Harrison.

Thanksgiving Day gives to each one of us the opportunity to pause and realize the blessings that we enjoy and which should instill the true spirit of genuine thankfulness in each heart.

In accordance with a long-established and respected custom a day commonly known as "Thanksgiving Day" is set apart on which to give thanks to our Heavenly Father for the manifold blessings which His gracious providence has bestowed upon us as a nation and individuals.

All of us have had our trials and troubles, but we have been brought with safety through another year by His guiding power; quiet and peace reign at home; the average health conditions is good; we have been undisturbed by pestilence or great catastrophies; harvests have in most sections been bountiful. For all these and many other blessings we should be truly thankful.

As we have grown and prospered in material things, so also should we progress in moral and spiritual things. We, as a Godfearing people, should set ourselves against evil and strive for righteousness in living. We should, from our abundance, help and serve others.

We should have good dinners (provided we can afford them). We should thank God for His bounty and enjoy the feast. But remember, that it should not be a day of feasting alone. We should make it above all what it is meant to be—a day of true, sincere thanksgiving to God and a time of spiritual refreshment.

Then again, we should be thankful for health, strength and vigor, to perform our duties; for the "kindly fruits of the earth," for sunshine and rain; for our failure and mistakes, for they are but signs pointing out ways and paths we should avoid in the future; for tomorrow and its promises: for the will and desire to do, and the courage to dare; for the growing tendency of our people to measure things by the standard of righteousness; for the increasing disposition of our people to think and plan ahead for themselves on all questions.

Let us Thank God more earnestly for them on the coming Thanksgiving Day than ever before. And let us not stop after Thanksgiving Day is past, but learn to continue to thank Him daily as we go about our duties. This will make living far easier and our burden not nearly so heavy to carry. Think on these things!

Missions a Force for Peace.

Friends of peace are not always aware of the many ways in which the missionary enterprise has already operated to diminish the causes of war. We sometimes forget that the books on such lands as China and Japan most widely read in this country are those issued by the mission study agencies, and that these texts are warmly appreciative of these peoples. In this year of strained relations in the Pacific, it is highly significant that the churches, through the missionary societies, are studying Japan. More than one instance has reported where the attitude of a congregation toward the island empire has been changed from suspicion and hostility to one of understanding and sympathy. It is also significant that the Institute of Pacific Relations, the most influential of the organizations which have set as their primary task the maintenance of peace in the Pacific, was organized by a missionary and is the direct outgrowth of the missionary enterprise. A large proportion of those who today are known as American experts on China and Japan and are interpreting those lands to Americans are either missionaries, or the children of misionaries. Through missionaries, moreover, many in other lands have seen the better side of the United States and have come to feel for it a friendly regard. Such organizations as the International Missionary Council, the World's Student Christian Federation, the World's Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, and the world organizations of the Sunday schools and of various denominations which owe their wide geographic scope to the missionary enterprise bring peoples of many nations and races together in the common bond of their Christian faith. The contacts between the National Christian Councils of China and Japan during the late Sino-Japanese troubles helped at least a few to bridge the chasms between those two peoples. Missions already have been, then, much more than is usually suspected, an agency making for peace.

WE ARE BROTHERS ALL.

The English love their England,
The Frenchman loves his France;
And loyalty around the globe,
Thrills when its flags advance.

We love our native country,
This land where freedom dwells;
But in the breasts of most of us,
High patriotism swells.

Each loves the land that bore him,
If it be large or small;
But none of us should once forget,
That we are brothers all.

One human race—all kindred;
One Father—God above:
One purpose is our program
All wrapped and tied with love.

There is no room for hatred;
No time for war and greed;
No selfish cause sufficient,
To make the nations bleed.

My joy should be your progress:
Your joy should be in mine;
And each for all in practice,
Would work out mighty fine.

Monastery of St. Katherine, Mount Sinai.

The Bishop of Gloucester, chairman of the Church of England Council on Foreign Relations, writes: "A year ago Bishop Gwynne visited the Monastery of St. Katherine, and was hospitably received by the Archbishop of Mount Sinai. As is well known, it was in this monastedy that Tischendorf discovered the famous Codex Sinaiticus, which is now in the British Museum. The monastery still has many priceless documents and ecclesiastical heirlooms which the present generation of monks guard carefully. The Bishop found some of the priests, who are scholars, working with a distinguished expert from Athens, but the library is small and the monastery very poor. At the suggestion of Bishop Gwynn, with the full backing of the Council on Foreign Relations and the approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury, a small committee has been formed to raise a sum of money as a token of respect from Anglicans to the Archbishop of Sinai and his monks, the idea being that this may be used particularly for the improvement of the library accommodation. Many of your readers will no doubt feel sympathy for their fellow Christians in this ancient home of learning and piety and would wish to send them a gift as a gesture of our good will." The members of the committee are: The Bishop in Egypt and the Sudan, Lord Hugh Cecil, Sir Harry Luke, Canon J. A. Douglas, Mr. Athelstan Riley (hon. treasurer) and the Rev. E. M. Bickersteth, commissary to Bishop Gwynne (hon. secretary).

On Sharing.

If nobody smiled and nobody cheered,
And nobody helped us along,
If each every minute looked after himself,
And the good things all went to the strong;
If nobody cared just a little for you,
And nobody thought about me,
And we all stood alone to the battle of life
What a dreary old place this would be.

FOR THE CHILDREN

GIVING THANKS.

For the hay and the corn and wheat that is reaped,
For the labor well done, and the barns that are heaped,
For the sun and the dew and the sweet honeycomb,
For the rose and the song, and the harvest brought home,
Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

For the trade and the skill and the wealth in our land,
For the cunning and strength of the workingman's hand,
For the good that our artists and poets have taught,
For the friendship that hope and affection have brought,
Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

For the homes that with purest affection are blest,
For the season of plenty and well deserved rest,
For our country extending from sea unto sea,
The land that is known as the "Land of the Free,"
Thanksgiving! Thanksgiving!

One Brumley Thanksgiving.

It was the day before Thanksgiving. Of all the boys of Brumley School less than twelve were remaining for the holidays. Dick Hosmer's folks were traveling in the Orient, so his house was closed. Red Rogers and Dean Howell, Hal Kendrick and the other fellows who were staying on lived too far off to reach home in the few days' vacation allowed.

Just as Sam Bumpus was about to take the bus for the station a telegram arrived bearing the news that his family were in quarantine. There was nothing to do now but make the best of it. The other boys followed him to his room and watched him unpack his bag.

"Tough luck, Sam, old scout," sympathized Dick, "when you were all packed and ready to leave, too."

"Who's sick, anyhow?" asked Red. "Why did they have to go and pick Thanksgiving of all times, to be sick?"

"It's my kid sister, Jane. She isn't really very sick. It's scarlet fever, the telegram says. Just sick enough for a quarantine."

"Now, isn't that just like a girl? What could you expect?" questioned Red.

"Oh, well, sisters aren't so bad sometimes. She probably didn't have it for fun. I guess I can stand a vacation at Brumley as well as you fellows can. What's up, anyway?"

"Big game tomorrow," answered Hal. "A lot of good that will be to me when I haven't any ticket. What about today?"

"Wish you'd tell me," said Hal. "If I were at home now I'd be sampling pies and cracking nuts and—"

"Boy, wouldn't some home-cooked food taste good about now," interrupted Dean.

"Two rings! Sounds like the postman," announced Red. The other boys followed close at his heels as he rushed down the stairs for the mail. It proved to be a real holiday mail with something for every one of them. There were letters and cards and packages, too.

"Boy! Look at that box! Who said home-cooked food? Whose friend am I?" exclaimed Dick.

"Whoopee! This belongs to me. Hands off there!" demanded Hal.

"Don't you want a lift? Here, let me help you to carry it upstairs." Together Hal and Dick lugged the big box up the stairs.

Meanwhile Dean had claimed another package, not so big as Hal's, but quite large enough to look interesting.

"Hey, there, Dean, let me help, do!" urged Sam, laughingly. But Dean refused this help.

"Guess I can carry it alone," he said. "Nothing to get excited about. Just a new sweater and stuff my mother said she would send, most likely." And he shut the door of his room after him as he disappeared with his box.

"Sweater, maybe! Say, did you lift that box? 'Perishable', too. If that isn't eats I'll eat my hat!" chuckled Red, as he followed the others down Hal's corridor.

With plenty of cheerful assistance, Hal made short work of opening his box. When wrappings were sufficiently removed there came to view a fruit cake, mince turnovers, doughnuts, candy, nuts, raisins, figs and dates, and a good supply of fine red apples. Hal eyed the contents possessively.

"Have an apple, fellows, and some figs," he invited, but he didn't say anything about helping themselves to the turnovers and doughnuts in spite of plenty of broad hints in that direction. "Wonder why she sent me figs? She knows I'm not keen about 'em," he murmured. "Guess I'll save these until later," he said, as he put the cover back on the box after helping himself to one cooky.

After awhile the boys trooped away, leaving Hal apparently about to write a letter home. Later, however, when Red burst unceremoniously into the room to borrow a magazine he had seen lying on Hal's desk, what should he find but Hal sitting at his desk, to be sure, but not writing a letter home. With the open box by his side and good things spread out all over the desk, he was just putting the last of a turnover into his mouth while in his other hand were several nuts destined to follow the turnover.

"The old glutton!" scolded Red, as later he rehearsed the scene to the others. "Guess he'll save 'em until later, eh? Guess we'll have no indigestion over his treat." To this the others agreed.

"Hope he has indigestion. It would be only decent that he should."

"Sure, serve him right! Hope he does."

"Oh, well, that's his picnic. Ho, Hum! What fun is a vacation at school?"

Just then the door bell echoed through the hall.

"Special for Sam Bumpus," someone called from below.

"Me! Must be a mistake," declared Sam. "Couldn't be for me. I'm supposed to be seventy miles from here now."

It was not a mistake, however. It was another box and, sure enough, it bore the name of Samuel Bumpus.

"That's my sister Sue's writing, the one that's married. Here's a note, too:

> Dear Sam.—So sorry Jane's illness must keep you at school. I would have you here in a minute, you know, if we had not promised to go elsewhere. I am sending a little reminder of home. It should arrive with this note. Hope you will like it.
> Lovingly,
> Sue.

"Bully for Sue! Come on, fellows, give us a lift."

The box was opened amid loud exclamation of delight.

"Filled cookies! Help yourselves, fellows. What's this?"

"Brownies! Oh, boy! I'm glad I came. Going to save 'em until later, Sam?" laughed Dick.

"Save 'em? Watch me! We'll store 'em away for safekeeping, you bet. Just the time for a party. Somebody get the rest of the crowd. We'll have a spread that is one. Hurry along!"

"What about Hal and Dean?"

"Bring them along. We can't leave any one out."

"Maybe they'll bring their stuff, too," said Red as he started after them. He found a "Busy" sign on Hal's door, but he knocked loudly. "Sam has a box from home. He's thowing a party. Want to come?"

"Sure thing! I'll be right there," answered Hal promptly. "Should I bring my grub along, do you think?"

"Should you? It's your grub. What do you think?" replied.

Hal did bring his grub. He sat close to his own supply, however, when they gathered in Sam's room.

What a spread it was! Sam's sister Sue had done well in the short time she had worked. "Look at the pile of sandwiches, will you? Pitch in, fellows. They'll never be so good again," invited Sam, no one waited for a second invitation.

Dean wrapped a cookie and a brownie in a paper napkin and slipped them in his pocket.

"They'll keep," he thought. "I'd rather have them later. With my supply, if I'm careful, they'll last me a long while." Red saw and nudged Dick.

"Watch Hal," whispered Dick. "Bet he swallows 'em whole. He's doing his part by Sam's Chocolate cake, too."

There was plenty for everyone. "A feast fit for a king," Sam wrote his sister later.

When the boys started for the big game the next day, Hal was sick. "I can't imagine what upset me," he complained. Somehow, Dean was not invited to go along with the others. But from somewhere they managed to find an extra ticket for Sam.

The Surprise Cellar.

"I never heard of a party in a cellar," said nine-year-old Vera Drake.

"Mother says it is the only place in the house where we can have ten boys and girls all at once," said her older sister Margaret, with a big sigh. "Let's ask Grandpa Ware what he thinks about it."

"Hum! Hum! Certainly. Of course," said Grandpa Ware as he looked around the sunny cellar.

"We have a cellar clean and neat
We want a party gay and sweet;
With two bright girls and grandpa, too,
You'd be surprised what we can do!"

"What shall we do?" asked Vera quickly.

"We can make a couple of tables and use boxes for seats," said grandpa. 'How about newspapers and paper bags for decorations?"

"Big paper bags decorated with pictures and colored with crayons would make funny hats for everybody," said Margaret.

"I can make a square newspaper doily for each plate at the table," said Vera eagerly. "If I use the joke pages, each doily can be read aloud to make more fun at the party."

"I will find different colored wrapping paper for the napkins," planned

Margaret. "They can be cut about ten inches square and folded into triangles. Each napkin might have a verse written on it. Dear me, I shall have to make up ten verses! How would this one do for a start:

"We wish you all a jolly time
And hope you'll come again
You're welcome to our cellar
In sunshine or in rain."

"That's good," said Vera admiringly. "Perhaps I can think of a verse too." After a moment she said:

"A party in the cellar
Is nice and new you see,
And at this cellar party
We hope you'll happy be."

"Fine!" said Grandpa Ware, who had been feeling of the smooth cement walls of the cellar. "Here is another verse:

"Surprises are the spice of life
And here is one today,
This cellar is a magic place
Where you may come and play."

"This is going to be fun!" cried Vera. "Which would you rather have," suddenly asked her grandfather, "an apple orchard, an ocean full of sailboas, a big snowy mountain or an enchanted castle?"

"Where? How? What do you mean?" asked Vera.

"Oh, he is only teasing us," said Margaret, laughing. "Yes, thank you, grandpa, we will have them all."

"This is a surprise cellar and you are going to be surprised," said Grandpa Ware, his eyes twinkling. "Now run along, and get your party things done, but if either of you show even the tip of your nose in this cellar until I say so, you might get a surprise spanking!" He tried to look very stern, but the girls only laughed.

It was three whole days before Grandpa Ware would let anyone see what he was doing in the cellar. Then one afternoon he came marching into the kitchen and said to Vera and Margaret, "It is about time you girls were getting the cellar ready for your party."

"Hurrah! At last!" cried Vera, and both girls started on a run for the cellar.

"Why Grandpa Ware!" gasped Margaret, who got there first, "I never imagined anything like this!"

"Oh, what a surprise! It's wonderful," exclaimed Vera.

The girls ran from side to side of the cellar, trying to decide which wall they liked best. All around the cellar were beautiful pictures painted on the cement walls. On one wall were big white sailboats floating on blue waters. Another wall showed red apples hanging from the branches of green trees near a white cottage surrounded with yellow flowers. In a third scene children on sleds were sliding down the snowy sides of a mountain that rose to meet a deep blue sky. The fourth wall of the cellar showed a great brown castle standing near a river, with sheep grazing in wide meadows.

"The cellar has turned into fairyland," said Vera. "You have often painted small pictures for us, grandpa, but I didn't know you could paint big ones like this."

"I didn't know it myself until I started in," chuckled grandpa. "Now you girls clear up the rest of the cellar, and perhaps you can paint the boxes for seats while I make the tables. If we all work hard I think we can make the surprise cellar a real playroom for any time and always."

It took almost the rest of two weeks to get the cellar ready for the party and the party ready for the cellar but at last it was done.

When the children arrived, Margaret and Vera led them out to the yard and around to the cellar door. As they swung it open they sang:

"Come in and see the surprises
The cellar has today,
We hope you'll like our playroom
And often come to play."

Such a chorus of "Oh's" and "Ahs's" and laughs and shouts and exclamations went up when the children trooped into the cellar, that no one could tell what anyone was saying, but no one cared because everyone was smiling and happy.

The sunlight lay across the yellow table and touched the green box seats, the waves on the wall seemed to dance, the castle looked as if it were full of delightful secrets, the red apples shone and glistened on the bright trees and the children on the sleds smiled like the real children.

The two tables were gay with fancy napkins, and colored baggy hats at each place. Plump round paper bags, painted in all the colors of the rainbows and bulging with sandwiches and cookies, were lined up in a row down the center of the tables. A big bag filled and brimming over with apples, oranges and bananas stood at each end of the four corners.

The afternoon was not half long enough to hold all the fun. There were games and a peanut hunt, and a jolly time reading the verses and jokes at the tables. Before the party was over, Grandpa Ware was brought in and crowned King of the Surprise Cellar.

"I never thought much of cellars before this," said one of the girls, "but I want to come here again."

"I liked this party because everything about it has been so different," said one of the boys.

And after the children had gone, Vera turned to her sister with a laugh and said, "Remember how we fussed when mother said we had to use the cellar?"

"And now everyone on the streets is going to have a good time in it," said Margaret happily.

A Thanksgiving Present.

"Oh, what a fine red wagon you have!" said little Joe White, peeking through the alley fence.

"Yes," replied Howard, "and when I get my pet goat here harnessed up, two or three of us can have a lovely ride."

"Wish I were lucky like you children, with your goat and fine wagon and all," said Joe, as he moved away from the fence and walked down the alley to his own little tumble-down house.

"Kind of too bad about Joe White," remarked Howard that night after mother had finished the bedtime story. "He hasn't got anything to play with —no wagon, no goat, or anything; and I don't suppose he'll have any Thanksgiving dinner." Thelma said, "Yes, and we have pumpkin pie, and candies, and nuts, and all sorts of good things."

"I wish Joe could have as good a dinner," answered Howard. "When I don't like anything at the table and feel like fussing about it, I always think how glad Joe would be to have it. He looks like he felt hungry all the time. I wish we could give him something on Thanksgiving Day to make him happy."

"I'll help you fix up a little Thanksgiving present for Joe and his mother." said Howard's mother, "but you must think out what you want to do. I think you'll enjoy your own dinner better if you know you are sharing it with somebody else who really needs it."

"I've got an idea already!" exclaimed Howard suddenly. "Joe wants a red wagon just dreadfully. He's always talking about mine. I have a box out in the barn and some wheels. I believe I can make him one. Wendell, of course, will want to help, and Thelma can paint it red with some of pa's paint he had for the fireplace. She's the artist of the family."

"I'll do it all nice," agreed Thelma. "Then we can harness goatie up and take the wagon to Joe Thanksgiving Day."

"But we'll want to put something in the wagon," suggested mother. "What shall it be, something for Thanksgiving dinner?"

"I'll give 'em one of my bunnies," said little Wendell.

"I'll give them one of the pumpkins I raised," said Howard. "Yes, and some potatoes, squashes and onions out of my garden."

"And I'll give them my share of candy, nuts and fruits," added Thelma.

"That will be fine," said mother. "I'll add a mince pie, a new loaf of bread and some other things. I'm sure we'll enjoy our own good dinner better for sharing it with our needy neighbors."

Early Thanksgiving morning the children loaded the new wagon with good things, then harnessed the goat to it and made their way to Joe's house.

"Whew!" cried Joe, as the children came up the walk. "What a lovely new wagon! You're lucky boy, Howard."

"We made it for you," said Thelma. "Yes, and we've brought you a Thanksgiving present. We've had the greatest fun getting it ready for you and your mother."

"The wagon and all that's inside is yours," said Howard smiling.

"Whew! It's a Thanksgiving Day present, is it?" asked Joe, surprised. "Oh, you're so kind." Then he called excitedly, "Mother, come and see the lovely present, and its all for us!"

GLAD THANKSGIVING DAY.

The goldenrod candles are all burned out
By the zigzag fence of gray;
The asters have turned to withered seeds
That the wind will flutter away;
But here's a cheer for the waning year,
And the glad Thanksgiving day!

The thrushes have flown from the tree-tops high,
And the buebirds could not stay;
And lone and hushed are the empty nests;
But the children smile as they say,
"When frost is chill on the misty hill
Comes the glad Thanksgiving day."

They know that the harvest is garnered in
With its ripe and golden store,
And patient and still the brown earth waits,
For the time of its toil is o'er;
It waits the snow that shall fold it low,
Till it wakes from sleep once more.

The daisies will whiten the fields again
And the robins build, next May;
So gratefully sing, little children, sing,
Till the air with mirth is gay.
A song for the cheer of the happy year
And the glad Thanksgiving day!

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK'S ITINERARY WHILE IN AMERICA.

The crowded itinerary of the Archbishop of York for his five-weeks' visit to the United States runs as follows, according to present arrangements.

Leaving Southampton on November 30 by the Bremen, the Archbishop and Mrs. Temple arrive in New York and go directly to Washington, D. C., where they are the guests of Bishop Freeman. The Archbishop, introduced by the Presiding Bishop, will broadcast an address at ten o'clock Sunday morning, December 8, in the "Church of Air" series, and will preach at the eleven o'clock service in the Washington Cathedral.

Sunday night will be spent with relations of Mrs. Temple's at Martinsville, Va., the Archbishop returning on Monday to the College of Preachers in Washington. Here he conducts a clergy conference December 9-13.

On December 13 he goes to Trenton, N. J., and is the guest of Bishop Matthews at Princeton, where he attends a conference with representatives of ecumenical movements, a convocation of Princeton University, and a dinner in his honor. The morning of December 14 is scheduled for "rest" and in the afternoon the Archbishop drives to New York City, where he will be Bishop Manning's guest.

On Sunday, December 15, he preaches at the Cathedral in the morning, at Trinity Church in the afternoon, and at night again in the Cathedral for a special service under the auspices of five international agencies for promoting Christian reunion, namely, World Conference on Faith and Order, Universal Christian Council for Life and Work, International Missionary Council, World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, and the World Student Christian Federation.

Visits to Union and General Theological Seminaries with luncheon at the latter, a Convocation of Columbia University, and a dinner given by the Church Club of New York will amply fill December 16.

During the following day the Archbishop will spend four hours at Yale, arriving in Boston in the evening, where he will be the guest of Dean Sperry of Harvard and of Bishop Sherrill November 21 and 22. He lectures twice at Harvard, visits the Harvard Divinity and the Episcopal Theological Schools, attends a luncheon given by President Conant of Harvard, a dinner of the English-speaking Union, and a Ford Hall Forum. On Sunday, the twenty-second, he preaches in the morning at Trinity Church, Boston, and in the evening at the Cathedral.

On the twenty-third the Archbishop goes to Providence as the guest of Bishop Perry. He will be the celebrant at an early service for the clergy of the diocese on Tuesday, December 24.

Directly after Christmas Day the Archbishop leaves for Indianapolis, where a National Conference of Theological Students on December 27 precedes the Quadrennial Convention of the Student Volunteer Movement, December 28-January 1.

A visit to Cincinnati is to follow here if possible before the Archbishop goes to Chicago as the guest of Bishop Stewart. Details of the Chicago visit are not yet complete, but they include the Moody Lectures at the University of Chicago on January 7, 8 and 9, and other appointments made through Bishop Stewart.

The Archbishop returns on January 10 to New York, where, after a dinner with the Pilgrims, he sails on the Europa at midnight for England.

The Archbishop's title is the Most Reverend and Right Honorable William Temple, D. Litt., D. D., Archbishop of York and Primate of England. Formerly Bishop of Manchester, he became Archbishop of York in 1929, succeeding Archbishop Lang, who became Archbishop of Canterbury. His rare personal qualities and extraordinary abilities have resulted in a brilliant career. He was born October 15, 1881. Rugby and Balliol College, Oxford, preceded his ordination in 1909. He was president of the Workers Educational Association from 1908-1924; a Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, 1904-10; Headmaster of Repton School, 1010-14; Rector of St. James' Church, Picciadilly, 1914-18; Canon of Westminster, 1919-21; Bishop of Manchester, 1921-29. His offices, however, do not reflect his varied activities, whether as diocesan administrator, member of numerous boards and committees, correspondent, leader of Quiet Days at the Ember seasons, speaker, counselor and author. In the United States he is best known by his books, especially "Christ the Truth," published in 1924, and "Nature, Man and God" in 1934. Who's Who states that his favorite recreation is "walking."

Mrs. Temple accompanies her husband on his visit to the United States. Those who know her speak of her as "a singularly charming and gracious lady."

"CHURCH OF THE AIR" SERIES: ARCHBISHOP OF YORK NEXT SPEAKER.

The Archbishop of York is the next speaker to broadcast in the Episcopal "Church of the Air" series, speaking from the Bethlehem Chapel of the Cathedral in Washington at ten o'clock eastern time Sunday morning, December 8, over WJSW on a nation-wide network of the Columbia system. His subject will be the present industrial situation. This will be the Archbishop's first official engagement as he arrives from England only the day before. He will be the guest of Bishop Freeman in Washington. At the broadcast he will be presented by the Presiding Bishop. The Cathedral choir will assist at the service. Mr. Robert G. Barrow is organist and choirmaster.

Directly after the broadcast, the Archbishop will preach at the eleven o'clock service in the Cathedral. This will be broadcast locally. For the nation-wide radio address, previous commitments made it necessary to keep the earlier ten o'clock sequence.

Next in the Church of the Air series will be the Presiding Bishop's message for the New Year on Sunday, December 29, speaking from Providence, Rhode Island.

GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY NOTES.

A new member of the teaching staff this year is Miss Mary S. Brisley, who has been for some years the executive secretary of the National Church Mission of Help. She has been appointed lecturer in Pastoral Theology to succeed Leonard W. Mayo, of the Children's Village and the School for Social Work, who has withdrawn because of the pressure of duty in connection with the National Relief Administration. Miss Brisley is giving the required senior course in Social Work, especially as related to pastoral care.

The Rev. Charles R. Feilding, Robert N. Rodenmayer and Jonathan G. Sherman have resigned as fellows and tutors, in order to take up parochial work. There have been no new fellows appointed. Mr. Norman Pittenger of the senior class is acting as tutor for Juniors.

The annual banquet of the Missionary Society, when the new students are welcomed into membership in the organization, was held in the Refectory on Tuesday evening, October 15. The speakers were the Dean of the Seminary, Benjamin Minifie, president of the society, and the Rt. Rev. W. Blair Roberts, D. D., Missionary Bishop of South Dakota.

Student registration this year is divided as follows:

Fellows	3
Graduate Students	17
Seniors	28
Middlers	24
Juniors	26
Special Students	8
Guest Students	4
Total	110

G. T. S. ALUMNI ELECT TO BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The alumni of the General Theological Seminary have elected as their representatives on the Board of Trustees of the Seminary the Rt. Rev. Paul Matthems, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey; the Rev. Wallace J. Gardner, D. D., Vicar of the Chapel of the Intercession, New York City, and Dr. Ralph Adams Cram, of Sudbury, Mass., to serve until January 1, 1939. Bishop Matthews and Dr. Cram succeed themselves.

WESTERN NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. George A. Beecher, D. D., Bishop.

Annual Meeting of the Hastings Deanery.

The Hastings Deanery, which comprises all the parishes and missions in Western Nebraska south of the Platte River, held its annual meeting in St. Paul's Church, Arapahoe, on Thursday, November 14.

The morning session opened with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 A. M., the celebrant being the Very Rev. Francis R. Lee, Dean of St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Hastings. The Epistle was read by the Rev. J. C. Ferrier, and the Gospeler was the Rev. R. A. Johnson, Rural Dean of the Hastings Deanery and rector of St. Paul's Church.

In his address, Bishop Beecher discussed at some length the spiritual implications of the Forward Movement. "It is a continuous program which aims to create a new vigor in the life of the Church," said the Bishop.

Woman's Work in the Parish, and Man's Place in the Church, were topics presented, respectively, by Mrs. A. J. Ford, Educational Secretary, and the Rev. J. C. Ferrier of Holdrege.

In the afternoon there was a joint session of the clergy, the laity and the Woman's Auxiliary. The Rev. H. B. Vinnedge, Ph. D., rector of St. Alban's Church, McCook, and Dean Lee of the Pro-Cathedral, were the speakers. They both stressed the Program of the Church.

Bishop Beecher's Twenty-fifth Anniversary to Be Celebrated.

The diocese is now preparing to celebrate in an appropriate way, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of the Rt. Rev. George Allen Beecher, D. D. These anniversary services will be held in St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Hastings, Nebraska, on St. Andrew' Day, November 30, and will continue through Sunday, December 1.

The Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, D. D., Bishop of Minnesota, and President of the Province of the Northwest, will be present as the official representative and spokesman for the Province. The Governor of Nebraska, the Hon. Roy C. Cochran, the former Attorney General of Nebraska, the Hon. Paul Good, Wm. C. Ramsey, Grand Master of the Masonic Fraternity of the State, and other distinguished citizens, will be among the speakers at the banquet which will be held at the Clarke Hotel on Sunday, December 1, at 1:30 P. M.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. James E. Freeman D. D Bishop

Bishop Freeman Speaks at the Tomb of President Wilson on Armistice Day.

"There is little evidence that America has experienced a moral or spiritual reformation," declared Bishop James E. Freeman, in his Armistice Day address. "We are unresponsive to the solemn admonition of the dying War President when he said: 'Our civilization cannot survive materially, unless it be redeemed spirituality.' He was speaking at the tomb of the late President Wilson in the presence of Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Roosevelt and a distinguished gathering.

"In the days of the mighty struggle, when nation was locked with nation in mortal combat, a great English writer declared: 'Our sons have shown us God.' In that hour of supreme suffering and awful waste of precious lives, we were sobered and made reflective. Then we reckoned with values that were real and not artificial. We thought of the strength of men and of nations in terms of what they were, rather than of what they possessed. We were solemnly resolved that we would exterminate forever the causes that had produced a universal disaster. We made pacts and agreements, we sought to recement ties that had been shattered, we undertook to rebuild on firmer footings a civilization that boasted of its Christian origin. . . ."

"Quickly we forgot the lessons of the war, even while we reared costly memorials to our honored dead. Those ten years glorified us materially while they depleted us morally and spiritually. Our quest for gain, our enervating indulgences, our passion for change and variety, our prodigal extravagances, conspired to make us weak and unready to meet the trials that came upon us in the fateful October of 1929. In an incredibly short space of time our weaknesses were exposed, our follies laid bare, our heritage laid waste and our clever devices made of none effect. Who will venture to recount or attempt to appraise the sufferings and the ills of these more recent years? By no known system of measurements may we compute our losses.

"It is at such a stage in our development we find ourselves on this latest Armistice Day. While we ponder our own estate, new war clouds once again obscure the sun an threaten further the world's peace. To cry peace, peace, when there is no peace, is to deceive ourselves. Surely now, if ever, we of America are called to address ourselves to those things that constitute our strength and our security. . . .

"Washington admonished the nation that morality and religion were the sure props to sustain a people. Neglected or unrecognized, atrophy and decay inevitably ensue. The disclosure of these post-war years indicate that we of America have sacrificed ideals to material advantage, that we have builded our modern house upon insecure foundations. All our planning, all our legislation, indeed all the work has paid scant heed to those elemental things that concern character. Youth and age alike have grown unresponsive to those high claims having to do with our ideals as a people. It would seem that policies must supercede principles, party prestige and advantage be more controlling than the old concepts of patriotism, and the Constitution be made to adjust itself to new and strange doctrines.

"This Armistice Day is a day of solemn and sacred memories. The lessons it seeks to enforce may not be forgotten or lightly set aside. If economic advantage is our quest; if restored confidence is to be had at the cost of sacrificial principles and ideals; if prosperity is to be secured at any price, then armaments and armies are our only security and we are headed for days of continuing strife and bloodshed. It is an uninviting prospect for the oncoming generations and a tragic outlook for the world in general. Shall we not believe that the reflections of this hour will sober the minds of our people; that out of all the conceits and passions of men there shall come a fresh resolve to return to those sure and tested ways that alone lead to enduring happiness, prosperity and peace?"

LOUISIANA

Rt. Rev. James Craik Morris, D. D., Bishop

Visit of Bishop Hobson to the Diocese.

The Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop of Southern Ohio, has been visiting the principal parishes in this diocese, having delivered addresses at Shreveport and Baton Rouge, in the interest of the "Forward Movement." On November 13, he was in New Orleans and in the morning met with a number of the clergymen, in the afternoon spoke to the Woman's Auxiliary, and at night preached at Christ Church Cathedral. The service was conducted by Bishop Morris and the Very Rev. Wm. H. Nes, Dean of the Cathedral and eight of the local clergy were in the chancel. Bishop Hobson made a stirring appeal, stating that a resolution was adopted at the last General Convention, creating a Joint Commission on the "Forward Movement," of which he was appointed the Chairman, to present the objects and the plans of the movement to members of the church. He said it was not a new program, but one which has been in progress since Christ first instructed His disciples to follow His leadership in founding and perpetuating God's Kingdom on earth. Bishop Hobson said the Commission has sought to point the way to discipleship and the steps he said are some which Christ demanded of His first disciples and are summed up in the words "Turn, follow, learn, pray, serve, worship, share." Bishop Hobson's commanding appearance, deep sincerity and strong appeal seemed to have made a most favorable impression upon the congregation.

House of Bishops Stresses Missionary Note.

A stirring emphasis upon the importance of the Missionary work of the Church marked the three-day meeting of the House of Bishops in Houston, Texas, on November 5-7.

In a resolution adopted by the House, the Committee on the Promotional Responsibility of the Bishops (consisting of Bishops Fred Ingley, Cameron Davis, James M. Maxon, Walter Mitchell and J. I. B. Larned), it was stated: "We are mindful of the fact that parishes, dioceses and districts must have a care to strengthen themselves as well as strengthen the General work. We believe, however, that this purpose can best be served by the realization of our oneness, and by leading our people to face all three objectives together. Parochialism and diocesanism can never eventuate in spiritual and financial strength, and if we seek to put our parishes, dioceses, or districts, upon a firm basis before we put the General Work upon a sound basis, we shall not succeed in either purpose. They must be done together." The complete report of the Committee of Five was voted sent to the entire list of clergy throughout the Church.

Evangelical Education Society Gives Dinner: Canon Bezzant Guest of Honor.

The Rev. James S. Bezzant, Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of the Liverpool Cathedral and recognized as one of the foremost scholars of the Church of England, was the guest of honor and principal speaker at a dinner given November 22, by the Evangelical Education Society, a national organization of the Protestant Episcopal Church with its headquarters in Philadelphia.

Other speakers included the Rt. Rev. William L. Gravatt, Bishop of West Virginia, Honorary President of the Society, and the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of Pennsylvania. The Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, rector of St. Stephen's Church and Active President of the Evangelical Education Society, presided.

Canon Bezzant, who is the author of the article in the Encyclopedia Britannica on The History of the Church of England in the Nineteenth Century, spoke on "Present Trends in the Church of England." The dinner was given in the Community House of St. Stephen's Church. The Evangelical Education Society, which includes in its membership many Bishops and other clergy and laity of the Episcopal Church throughout the United States, furnishes aid to students who are preparing for the ministry and also prepares and distributes Evangelical literature. The society's records show that it has helped upwards of 1,200 men to complete their theological education. Since its incorporation sixty-six years ago it has maintained its headquarters in Philadelphia. In addition to the Rev. Dr. Grammer, other Philadelphia clergymen who are officers include the Rev. Dr. James O. McIlhenny, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, Active Vice-President; and the Rev. Charles H. Long, rector of Zion Episcopal Church, General Secretary.

A Living Memorial to a "Little Helper."

An impressive service was held in St. James' Sunday school, Richmond, on November 3, at 10 A. M., when Dr. Churchill J. Gibson, rector, consecrated to the memory of Richard Cannon Eley, Jr., aged seven years, of Boston, Mass., a miniature altar. This altar is to be not only a living memorial to "The Little Helper," who fell asleep in Jesus October 7, 1935, in Boston, the result of an automobile accident, but, it is hoped, by the donor, it will be a source of comfort to all bereaved parents within our parish.

The "Little Helpers" of St. James' of which Mrs. J. W. S. Gilchrist is President, is a missionary society for infants, and this little boy had been enrolled at St. James' Church since birth, Trinity Church, Boston, not having a "Little Helpers" branch. The children's hymns were sung by the junior department.

Richard-Cannon Eley, Jr., was the son of Dr. Richard Canon Eley of The Harvard Staff and Caroline Flynn Eley, and "beloved" grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Eley of Suffolk, Va. Mrs. Henry S. Eley is the beloved President of the Virginia Branch of the King's Daughters.

St. Paul's Memorial Church Celebrates Sixtieth Anniversary: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford's Families Attended the Parish.

The sixtieth anniversary of St. Paul's Memorial Church, Detroit, was celebrated appropriately during the week of November 17. The anniversary service, with sermon by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., was held on Sunday morning, November 17. On Wednesday evening a Parish Dinner was held, with the rector, the Rev. James G. Widdifield, as Toastmaster, and the Rev. Irwin C. Johnson, rector of St. John's Church, Detroit, as speaker. Following the dinner, an Old Time Dance was held, at which, through the graciousness of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford, one-time members of the Parish, the Ford Orchestra played, and Prof. Benjamin Lovett acted as Dancing Master. The week of festivity closed with a Children's Festival in the Parish House.

One of the oldest Parishes in the Metropolitan Detroit area, St. Paul's history goes back to the time when Grand River Avenue, upon which it is located, was a plank road, with two toll gates between it and the center of the city. The neighborhood, eight miles from the City Hall, was entirely undeveloped, and the small original church was built in what was actually the corner of a farm. The Parish was not called a "Memorial" Parish, until 1921, when the small original building was remodeled and the present foundation laid under it. The word signifies the gratitude of the congregation to those who laid the foundations, and the loving memory in which they are held.

The father and the grandfather of Mrs. Henry Ford were actively interested in the building of St. Paul's Church, "Greenfield," as the neighborhood was then called, her grandfather having for many years brought wood for the stove in his buggy. The late Rev. S. W. Frisbie, once in charge of the Parish, married Mr. and Mrs. Ford, baptized their son, and buried Mrs. Ford's father and mother. Mr. Ford's family also attended the parish, and the names of both families are closely associated with the history and records of St. Paul's for many years.

The Rev. James G. Widdifield, present rector, is celebrating, concurrently with the sixtieth anniversary of St. Paul's Memorial Church, his tenth anniversary as rector of the parish, and his twenty-fifth anniversary in the ministry.

Clergy and Laymen Back Bishop Manning in Missionary Goal.

On Thursday, November 14, three hundred and fifty clergy and vestrymen of parishes from all over the diocese met in the Synod Hall, at the call of Bishop Manning, and pledged their utmost efforts towards reaching the Dicosean Goal of $400,000 for the Missionary Work of the General Church and of the Diocese before December 31. The meeting was marked by great enthusiasm and represented all parts of the diocese, many of the clergy and laymen coming long distances to be present and remaining afterwards for supper in the Undercroft of the Synod Hall. The facts of the situation and the meaning of the Missionary Obligation were presented in stirring and forcible addresses by the Bishop and the two Suffragan Bishops and by the Rev. Dr. Fleming of Trinity Parish; Mr. Stephen Baker, Warden of St. James' Parish; Judge Edward R. Finch, Warden of St. Bartholomew's Parish, and others. At the close of the discussion the following resolution pledging all present to support of the Missionary Goal was presented by the Rev. Dr. Darlington, of the Church of the Heavenly Rest. The resolution was adopted unanimously and by a rising vote:

"Resolved: That we who are gathered here at this meeting of the clergy and laymen of the diocese called by the Bishop at the Synod House on Thursday, November 14, 1935, undertake to do all that is in our power to achieve the goal which we have accepted of $200,000 for the Missionary Work of the General Church and an equal amount for the support of our Diocesan Missionary agencies.

"We recognize that if this goal is to be attained all our parishes must do their utmost, and many of our parishes must give considerably more than the naturally conservative amounts which they have pledged as their "expectations.' These pledged 'expectations' represent the minimum and they are not sufficient to meet our diocesan obligation. We are confident that these 'expectations' will be exceeded by many of our parishes and we pledge ourselves to use our earnest efforts to bring this sacred obligation home to our several congregations and to arouse our people to a great united effort to reach our goal, and more if possible, between this present date and December 31."

St. Thomas' Commemorates Work of Bishop Stires.

The Bishop Stires Window, which was given by the parishioners of St. Thomas' Church, was dedicated Sunday, November 17, at the four o'clock service to mark the tenth anniversary of the Rt. Rev. Ernest Milmore Stires' consecration as Bishop of Long Island and to commemorate his work as rector of St. Thomas'. The central figure in the window is that of King Solomon. Other figures are Emperor Justinian, builder of Saint Sophia in Istanbul; Bishop Lanfranc, builder of Canterbury Cathedral; Bishop William Wykeham, builder of Winchester Cathedral, and Saint Louis, builder of Notre Dame in Paris. Bishop Stires was rector of St. Thomas' from 1901 to 1925.

Sir Norman Angell Speaks on Armistice Sunday at Peace Celebration.

"Emotionalism in world peace movements is not enough; nations and individuals must use their ability of intellect in passing upon international disputes," declared Sir Norman Angell, British economist and Nobel peace prize winner, speaking Armistice Sunday at St. James' Church, Chicago, where a peace celebration of international character occurred.

"War could never continue," said Sir Norman, "if men were not fundamentally noble. War is not made by wholly evil men. It is made by good men on both sides of the conflict, resulting from wrong attitudes, which are held to be right. Our task is to find out why men mistake wrong for right and to seek to avoid a similar attitude in the present world situation."

Sir Norman called upon nations and individuals not only to "have faith and believe, but act upon that faith rather than sit still and do nothing."

American and Canadian service groups; representatives of the United States Army and Navy, consuls of several countries were present at the service, arranged by Dr. Duncan H. Browne, rector of St. James'.

Clergy Become Students Under Canon Bell.

Under the leadership of Canon B. I. Bell, one of the most brilliant preachers in the Episcopal Church, a group of younger clergy from various parts of the diocese meet once a month to improve their sermon technique. At first the students numbered four, but when the news of what was going on spread, the class increased until there are now twelve in it.

It is a rather ruthless clinic the Canon carries on. The meetings are always held on a Monday morning and they last two hours. Two men preach the sermons they presented to their own congregations the day before and their brethren criticize the delivery, the subject matter, and everything that seems to them capable of improvement.

Here are the questions that Canon Bell has set down for the critics to ask:

I. Of the Preacher—

Could you hear him? Did he speak as one under a spiritual compulsion? Was he dignified, and yet without pomposity? Did he exhibit distracting mannerisms that drew undue attention to himself? Did he have a necessary "sense of the theatre"? Did he seem to like us all?

II. Of the Sermon—

Did it exhibit a supreme concern for God? Had it a note of dignified and sure authority? Did it teach the mind of the Church, or merely the peculiar tenets of the preacher? Did it show a true concern for people? Did it fill any real need of the actual congregation? Had it unity of thought and mood? Was the outline perfectly clear and coherent? Was there too much material or too little? Did it follow sound pedagogy, moving from contact to instruction to results? Did it end incisively? Was it a bore?

The class has been at it two years now, and the results, according to the teacher and to reports from congregations, have been notably fine.

The members are: Canon Anthony R. Parshley, rector of St. Michael's Church, Bristol; Rev. Roger Alling, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Pawtucket; Rev. James M. Duncan, rector of St. Albans' Church, Centredale; Rev. Richard Mortimer-Maddox, rector of St. John's Church, Barrington; Rev. Duncan Fraser, rector of St. Columba's Church, Middletown; Rev. Sydney R. Peters, rector of St. John's Church, Ashton; Rev. Edwin W. Grilley, rector of St. Mary's Church, Warwick Neck; Rev. Robert O. Meader, rector of St. Andrew's Church; Rev. Harold C. Whitmarsh, curate of St. Paul's Church, Pawtucket; Rev. Nelson W. Bryant, rector of St. George's Church, Newport; Rev. Russel S. Hubbard, rector of St. Martin's Church; Rev. Harold L. Solemn High Mass of Thanksgiving Celebrated.

A large congregation of admirers and friends of the greatly beloved Henry B. Bryan, priest, assisted in the offering of the Holy Sacrifice as an act of thanksgiving for over fifty years in Holy Orders, on Tuesday, October 1, when in the Church of the Holy Cross, Jersey City, Canon Bryan celebrated a Solemn High Mass of Thanksgiving, in the presence of the Bishop of Pennsylvania, who as a classmate and friend of boyhood days was the special preacher, and the Rt. Rev. Benjamin M. Washburn, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese.

The Rev. L. C. Rich, rector of Corpus Christi Church, New York City, was the deacon of the mass, and the Rev. Father Lang, curate of St. Peter's Church, Westchester, New York City, was the sub-deacon, acting for the rector of the parish, the Rev. Howard I. Johnson, who was prevented from taking active part by ill health. Bishop Taitt was attended by the Rev. G. Sherman Richards, D. D., of Atlantic City, and the Rev. John Quincy Martin, rector of the Church of St. John-in-the-Wilderness, Gibbsboro, New Jersey, as deacons of honor. Bishop Washburn, who pontificated, and gave a special blessing to Father Bryan after the solemn procession, was attended by the Ven. W. O. Leslie, Archdeacon of Orange, and the Rev. William Mitcham, of All Saints' Church, Orange, N. J.

The ceremonial of the mass was very efficiently and beautifully rendered under the direction of the Rev. R. P. Black, of New York City, who acted as ceremonarius, and to whom much credit is due. Sixty clergy in surplice and biretta sang Merbeck's Mass and took part in the solemn procession, which formed after the mass and was led by a trumpheter.

In the evening a public reception was tendered to Canon Bryan under the auspices of an interdenominational committee appointed by his friends and former parishioners. This was held in the Polish Community Center Hall in the neighborhood of his old parish. A very delightful program of music and addresses carrying testimonials from prominent civic leaders, followed by dancing, marked the evening.

It is greatly to be regretted that the diocesan authorities who now direct Grace Church refused to give their approval to the holding of the service in Grace Church, where Father Bryan is entitled to offer the Holy Sacrifice and where his old parishioners would have more conveniently have honored him, but the courtesy and kindness of Fr. Johnson and his parishioners enabled this great witness to his esteem to wipe away this disappointment.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Historical Service.

An historical service commemorating the 150th anniversary of the founding of the Diocese of South Carolina was held in St. Phillip's Church, Charleston, the mother parish of the Diocese, on Sunday evening, October 27, the preacher being the Rt. Rev. H. J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop of Atlanta, a native of this state and for a number of years rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, Charleston, and the Porter Military Academy.

The procession was headed by a large choir drawn from the parishes of the city, followed by lay members of the Standing Committee, Trustees of the Diocese, and the Executive Council; next came the clergy of the diocese, and last the Bishop of Atlanta and the Bishop of South Carolina, the Rt. Rev. A. S. Thomas, D. D. The beautiful church was filled with a large congregation, and the whole service was uplifting and inspiring.

The service was conducted by the rector, the Rev. Merritt F. Williams, the Psalm was read by the Rev. William Way, D. D., the lessons by the Rev. H. D. Bull and the Rev. Sumner Guerry, and the Creed and Prayers by the Rev. H. W. Starr, D. D. Bishop Thomas made a short introductory address and read the Bidding Prayer. The sermon by Bishop Mikell was a finely proportioned and interesting survey of the long history of the Church in South Carolina, from the founding of the colony to the present time: he dwelt upon the fact that we are the heirs of a long and splendid tradition, with more than a thousand years of the life of our mother Church of England lying back of the history of the Church in this state.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Cook, President of the National Council Celebrates Fifteenth Anniversary.

The Cathedral Church of St. John, Wilmington, was crowded on Monday, October 14, to celebrate with the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Welaware, and President of the National Council, the fifteenth anniversary of his consecration to the episcopate. The day began with a celebration of the Holy Communion in the lady chapel of the cathedral. Many hundreds of the Bishop's friends in the State of Delaware greeted him and Mrs. Cook at a reception in the chapter house. They included the Governor of Delaware, the Hon. C. Douglas Buck, with members of his staff, Bishops Francis Francis M. Taitt, Robert C. Jett, George W. Davenport, Frank W. Sterrett, practically all of the clergy of the diocese, with most of the lay officials.

Tea was served in the parish house, where the Dean of the Cathedral, the Very Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, read letters of congratulation from the President of the United States, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, Bishop Perry, the Mayor of Wilmington, and many other bishops who were not able to attend the reception. The women of the parishes of Wilmington were the hostesses.

Evensong was sung in the cathedral, under the direction of Paul H. Terry. The Rt. Rev. Charles Fiske, Bishop of Central New York, was the preacher of the occasion. The sermon was on leadership and its need today, with special reference to Bishop Cook a sthe ideal type of leader.

Personal Notes

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Ernest E. Piper, M. A., assistant minister at St. Bartholomew's Church since April 1, 1933, has accepted a call to the rectorship of Christ Church, Williamsport, Penn., in the Diocese of Harrisburg, as of December 1. After graduating from college, Mr. Piper specialized in educational administration, receiving his Master's Degree at Chicago University and continuing graduate study from time to time there and at Boston and Columbia Universities. Mr. Piper was baptized and presented for confirmation by the Rev. Dr. G. Paull T. Sargent, present rector of St. Bartholomew's, who was at that time rector of Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Through Dr. Sargent, Mr. Piper met Dr. William C. Sturgis, then Educational Secretary for the Department of Missions. Stirred by Dr. Sturgis' presentation of the call of the Church in the Nationwide Campaign, Mr. Piper gave up a promising career in secular education to enter the service of the Church as a layman, and came to the National Council as assistant to Dr. Sturgis, carrying on the latter's work while he was away for a year studying the Church's work in the mission field. At the end of the year Mr. Piper was called to the Diocese of Michigan, under the late Bishop Charles David Williams, to organize and develop the work of religious education in that diocese. After thirteen years of service as a layman, he took Holy Orders, being ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Herman Page, Bishop of Michigan, February 21, 1933.

On April 1, 1933, Dr. Sargent asked Mr. Piper to come to New York to build up the educational program at St. Bartholomew's Church, and the following September 17, he was ordained to the priesthood there by Bishop Page. In the past two and one-half years the program for children and youth at St. Bartholomew's has been reorganized as a Junior Congregation, the enrollment has been doubled, and an excellent staff of leaders has been assembled. Mr. Piper also assisted in the re-organization of the unique Community House Club, numbering over eight hundred business and professional young people, and served as its pastor and spiritual adviser. Mr. Piper was making a real and warm place for himself in Metropolitan New York and in the Diocese of New York. He was president of the Board of Religious Education of the diocese and chaplain of the Diocesan Young People's Fellowship. He leaves his associations there with regret, but is looking forward with enthusiasm to the challenge of his new work.

The Rev. Carl E. Range, curate at St. Mark's Church, Evanston, Illinois, has been called to be rector of Christ Church, Ottowa, Illinois, it is announced by the vestry. Fr. Range has accepted the call, effective December 1. He is a graduate of Nashotah House and has been at St. Mark's for more than three years. At Christ Church he succeeds the Rev. Hugh M. MacWhorter, now priest-in-charge of Annunciation Church, Chicago. Christ Church, Ottawa, is one of the oldest parishes in the Diocese of Chicago.

The Rev. James Harry Price was instituted eleventh rector of the Church of St. James the Less in Scarsdale, N. Y., by the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., on Sunday, November 7, at eleven o'clock. Mr. Price has for a number of years been an assistant at St. James the Less.

The Rev. Henry Felix Kloman, formerly rector of Emmanuel Church, Cumberland, Maryland, entered on his official duties at St. Mary's School and Junior College, Raleigh, N. C., on November 10. His new address is the above.

The Rev. Walter E. Bentley, Worldwide Missioner of New Dorp, S. I., New York City, is holding Missions, during November, in St. John's Church, Cuyahoga Falls, the Rev. F. McIlwain, rector; St. Peter's Church, Akron, the Rev. F. Eastman, rector, and Christ Church, Barberton, the Rev. R. Yocum, rector, all in the Diocese of Ohio, to be followed in Advent by a Mission at Christ Church, East Haven, Conn. The Rev. Alfred Clark, rector. Mr. Beentley is the rector emeritus of St. Stephen's Church, Port Washington, L. I.

The Rev. William P. C. Loane, D. D., one of the younger clergy of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, has accepted a call to the rectorship of the Church of the Incarnation, Drexel Hill, and will take charge December 8. Mr. Loane succeeds to the vacancy caused by the death last July of the Rev. Edward C. Knight under whom the Incarnation had its beginning as a Mission in 1918, and who became its rector upon its admisison as a parish in 1926.

Mr. Loane, born in 1902, is a native of Philadelphia. He is graduate of Hobart College, Geneva, N. Y., and of Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Conn., and immediately following his ordination to the diaconate in June, 1930, was chosen by the Rev. Dr. E. M. Jefferys, to serve on the clergy staff of historic St. Peter's Church, Philadelphia. Mr. Loane during his service at St. Peter's has made several trips to Europe and has also travelled extensively in this country.

Mr. Constant Southworth, seminarian and layreader, has been appointed to take charge of Grace Church, New Lenox, Illinois, according to announcement by the Ven. W. H. Ziegler, archdeacon.

Deaths.

Rev. Thomas Duck.

The Diocese of Atlanta has been saddened by the death of the Rev. Thomas Duck, retired missionary, who was living in Decatur. He was the oldest clergyman in point of service in the diocese, having served at sometime during his long ministry in all the mission stations of northern Georgia. Prior to coming to Georgia, he served as a missionary in Colorado. He is survived by his wife and two daughters.

Mrs. W. Stuart Symington, Jr.

The death of Mrs. W. Stuart Symington, Jr., on October 12, is not only a deep loss to the Diocese of Maryland but to the entire Church, as she was so active both in and out of her own diocese. Mrs. Symington died in the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, after an illness of several weeks and the funeral services were conducted in Mt. Calvary Church, Baltimore, by the Rev. William A. McClenthen, D. D., and the Rev. S. Tagart Steele, Jr., D. D. Burial was in St. Thomas' Churchyard, Garrison Forest, Md.

Mrs. Symington conducted many classes on Altar Guild work at Shrinemont, Adelynrood and throughout the Diocese of Maryland. At the last two General Conventions—Denver and Atlantic City, she conducted courses on the Altar Guild work.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

You can never speak to the wrong man about Christ.—Peter MacFarlane.

But there was nothing outside that could take away the joy inside.
—The first convert at Nala, Africa, on his return from a hard tour.

"His death affected the world as if a member of each family had passed away," said of Will Rogers.

My life, my love I give to Thee,
Thou Lamb of God who died for me;
O, may I ever faithful be,
My Saviour, and my God.
—R. E. Hunson.

The Christian religion is not the religion of Jesus Christ, although it includes that. It is Jesus Christ. There we stand. There is where St. Paul stood: "To me to live is Christ." "I live, yet not I; but Christ liveth in me." "When Christ Who is my life shall appear, then shall I also appear with Him in glory."
—Robert E. Speer.

This is the lovely joyful Gospel of the Evangel of Christ which tells us what we have from this King. We have forgiveness of sins, deliverance from death, eternal justification and eternal life, all out of pure grace and mercy, without any merit in us, through Christ alone.
—Martin Luther.

God has made us with two eyes, both intended to be used so as to see one object. Binocular vision is the perfection of sight. There is a corresponding truth in the spiritual sphere. We have two faculties for the apprehension of spiritual truth—reason and faith; the former intellectual, the latter largely intuitive, emotional. Reason asks: How? wherefore? Faith accepts testimony, and rests upon the person who bears witness.
—Dr. A. T. Pierson.

Missions is the biggest business on earth. Going out after the lost with Christ to the uttermost part is a task angels in heaven might covet. There is no other business that yields such valuable returns for an investment. Not many understand that truth, so the "King's Business" struggles along inadequately staffed, poorly supported, harshly criticized, or openly derided.
—Exchange.

The timid hand stretched forth to aid
A brother in his need;
The kindly word in grief's dark hour
That proves a friend indeed;
The plea for mercy gently breathed,
When justice threatens high,
The sorrows of a contrite heart—
These things shall never die.
—Southern Progress.

What we need today in our modern social world is men imbued with a sense of responsibility toward the community, and whose hands cannot be soiled with a bribe. The modern David, in places of honor and trust, must be made to feel the reproofs of sincere Nathans, and the Ananiases must receive the punishment of lies. If men would, like Christ, put God in the center of their vision, then our whole aim would be redirected and our lives perhaps would cease clashing with one another.
—Dr. Albert E. Ribourg.

Some Imporiant Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

What Is Christianity?

"In the home it is kindness.

In business it is honesty.

In society it is helpfulness.

In work it is fairness.

Toward the unfortunate it is the helping hand.

Toward the weak it is burden-bearing.

Toward the wicked it is evangelism.

Toward the strong it is trust.

Toward the penitent it is forgiveness.

Toward ourselves it is self-control.

Toward God it is reverence, worship and Love.

And the foundation stone, the undergirding motive of all the motives, is the Spirit of Christ."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Washington Prayer.

Mr. Editor:

Since the Freethinkers have appealed their case, and renewed the attack on the Washington Prayer, concentrating their fire on Old St. Paul's of Trinity Parish, and giving wide publicity to their views, it may be opportune to set forth the facts about the prayer. Washington's Prayer was included in a Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors, printed by the Bishop White Prayer Book Society of Philadelphia in 1917 (on page 104). It was widely used during the World War in both branches of the Service. Its inclusion in this book was influenced by the Rev. Dr. Washburn, at that time rector of Christ Church, Philadelphia, and an outstanding authority on everything pertaining to Washington. Mr. Clay, a resident of Georgia, and of New York, member of the Georgia Society of the Cincinnati, and a ranking Mason, had the Prayer engrossed on a large card, framed, and presented to St. Paul's. It was accepted and hung in the Washington Pew, with a religious service attended by Masons and others. The Prayer was used by the Sulgrave Society, which had the care of the ancestral Washington home, Sulgrave Manor. This society presented St. Paul's with several hundred small cards containing the Prayer, which were freely given to those who valued them. The Woman's Committee of the Sulgrave Institute presented a brass tablet with the prayer engraved upon it, which was affixed to the north wall of St. Paul's, over the Washington Pew.

Later a card was printed with a portrait of Washington in his pew at St. Paul's, from a dry-point etching by Joseph Wright after his drawing made in 1790, while Washington was attending service. (Courtesy of the New York Public Library.) Also on this card was a brief guide to the edifice and the church-yard, and the Washington Prayer for Our Country was included. The reference to the source was given to make all clear: from "Circular Letter addressed to the Governors of all the States on Disbanding the Army," dated 'Headquarters Newburgh 8 June, 1783." See "Writings of George Washington," collected by W. C. Ford, Vol. 10, p. 265. This letter is found in all comprehensive collections of the writings of Washington. Anyone who takes the trouble to look up the passage may see it has been put into direct address, and the invocation and ascription added, to cast it into prayer-form. That is, where Washington wrote, "We make our earnest prayer that God will keep the United States in His holy protection," etc., this indirect address has been made direct, "We make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States . . .", etc. Otherwise there is no change whatever in word or sense, and by Washington's own word it is a prayer. The giving of the original source shows there was no possible intention to deceive or misrepresent. It is not necessary to descend to fraud and deceit in order to establish the well-known Christian belief and practice, and loyalty to the Church, of our First President. He worshipped at St. Paul's, not only immediately following his Inauguration, but Sunday after Sunday, as his diaries attest, so long as New York remained the Capitol. The churches of Philadelphia and Virginia knew his later and enduring loyalty.

As to the charge that "even if it were Washington's prayer, it would show him to be merely a Deist and not a Christian," we may point out this portion: "To demean ourselves with that charity, humility, and pacific temper of mind, which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion," an unmistakable reference to our Divine Lord.

These small cards, "with malice toward none," containing guide, portrait, and prayer, were sold at ten cents to cover cost of printing. It was hoped after that was defrayed, the proceeds might be designated for some proper purpose, which object was not reached. When the controversy and legal action arose, the cards were withdrawn from sale, since the indirect attack on the Christian belief of President Washington was, to put it mildly, extremely distressing. Anyone may see the cards at St. Paul's, but for fear of misrepresentation, they are not sold or given away, but there is no mystery about them and nothing to conceal.

Do Worse Evils Justify War?

Mr. Editor:

In the October 5 issue of the Southern Churchman there appeared an article, Pacifism and Self-Defense, in which the author averred that (quoting substantially), "War, like Death, is preferable to a number of other things." The undersigned had the temerity to ask (Southern Church, October 19, 1935, p. 2) for a specific mention of a few of the aforesaid "number of other things," and finding them set forth on page two of the current (November 16) number of your excellent magazine, we wish now to express our thanks for their insertion.

The enumerated "other things" are, of course, of minor interest, the big question being this: Can a Christian, clergyman or layman, justify one evil by comparing it with another evil, or group of evils, which he considers worse? to which query all right-thinking people are bound to answer, Most emphatically, No!

"The Greeks had a name for it," and inasmuch as it was not only outmoded but actually ridiculed as long ago as the pre-Christian period in which Aristophanes lived, it is indeed strange to behold this type of "argument" making a bid for the "sweet odour of sanctity" in this present year of grace, its cause being pleaded by an unsuspecting shepherd who is undobutedly acting in all sincerity.

Bad never became Good by comparing it with Worse (actual or alleged), and War, the main theme of all this discussion, being admittedly bad, should receive condemnation rather than approval from Christians generally, but especially from the clergy.

Ira Charles Swanman.

What About The Jew?

Ludwig Lewisohn has edited a remarkable book (Rebirth, published by Harpers). It is a plea for Jews to think out their problem as a race and a religion. It is thought provoking for all.

To those of us who call ourselves Christians, the book, as indeed all books dealing with the problem of the Jew, is puzzling. We Anglo-Saxons are members of a mixed race. Compared to the Jew we are not an old race at all. It is hard for us to understand why the Jew wants to keep up a struggle for his ancient culture and racial characteristics. There is no nationalism for him to maintain, and to many of us it seems almost as improbable for the many races of Palestine to allow him the rule of his ancient land, as it would be for us in America to withdraw and give the land back to the native Indian. In both cases a priority can be claimed, and it is only too true that just as we took our country by intrigue and downright trickery from the natives, so Palestine was taken from the Jew, but it's "all so long ago."

Another problem that presents itself to the Christian is the Jew's devout attitude towards Christianity. The devout Christian generally feels that the best thing he can give to anyone is his religion. We love to have the Negro say that even before we gave him freedom, we gave him something better—the Christian religion. Yet the Jew resents—often indignantly—the Christian who would convert him. To the Christian this is hard to understand. Did we not get our religion from the Jew, either directly or indirectly? Are we not, in conversion, just trying to give him that which is his own?

And then is the Jew a nation or a religion? If he is a nation, his nationality is dependent upon an idealistic dream of a new Zion, which we practical Anglo-Saxons smilingly endorse in sentimental mood, but cannot understand. If the Jew is a religion, the majority of the race are indifferent, and the progressive branch of his church seems to be little more than an ethical culture society.

It is hard for us to figure these things out, and yet they must be faced. We have at the present time sympathy for him. In Germany he is under persecution and while he is used to that in history, we are ashamed that a so-called Christian nation is doing the persecuting. It serves to remind him constantly of that which we would have him forget, that he is a separate race and faith and not really wanted in any land and that the Christ which Christians hold out to him has little or no hold upon our Christian consciousness. It simply unites him at the international wailing wall into a race still more self-conscious of its difficulties and its problems. That he will be eliminated by Germany or any other nation through persecution is ridiculous.

And yet we cannot understand his attitude. A friend of ours had a son who wished to marry a beautiful young Jewess. The Anglo-Saxon father had hoped for some other daughter-in-law, but he did not raise objection to the choice of the son. Rather, it was the Jewish father that objected. The old struggle of keeping the race pure and non-contaminated with the Gentiles continues. To us it seemed that we could ask, "Is it all worth while?"

We have in America two definitely racial groups conscious of themselves and worried about their future. One is the Negro and the other is the Jew. The Negro is new to culture, radically different in racial background. His solution is one that will continue to puzzle the world for years to come. At present we pray and hope for justice and understanding in dealing with him and hope that a just Father in Heaven will lead us towards a solution.

But the Jew is of a race that has thousands of years of culture. His skin is the same color as the dominant people in the world. His contribution is tremendous. In music, poetry, science—almost everything, He gave us the background of our religion. To the Christian he gave us the only nation that the Son of God could have been born in. And yet he remains apart and we wonder why.

To read a book such as Lewisohn's adds to our puzzle. Call us narrow, narrow we will remain. For we cannot forget that all of America is a conglomeration of nations and peoples, and why should the Jew remain apart from the rest of us? Call us bigoted, and yet we cannot believe that a separate culture, a "spiritual Zionism," is any solution to the problem of the Jew—or of ours for that matter.

Our only hope would be for Christians to take Christ seriously and practice true brotherhood. Maybe, eventually, the real Christianity of understanding and beauty will appeal to the people who gave birth to that very religion. Christianity needs the Jew, and are we narrow when we say the Jew needs Christianity?

In the meantime Jews are de-Judaizing themselves. They are not attending the synagogues. At best the majority are only conscious that they are of a race apart from the rest of men. They are not developing their culture, nor are they developing their faith. Of course we cannot expect them to be assimilated in "two generations," but already we have in our own Church

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Open-Air Witness: What Should Be the Church's Attitude?

By Prebendary Wilson Carlile, D. D., Founder and Hon. Chief of the Church Army, in The Church of England Newspaper.

What should be the Church's attitude towards evangelistic work in the open-air? What benefits are likely to accrue to individuals at present outside the Church's influence? Is it possible to reach such individuals? How can it be done? What type of meeting is likely to be most effective in producing results? What is likely to be the effect of such work, if it is successful, on the life of a parish and on the life of the Church as a whole? These are all pertinent questions which should be faced by those who are eager for the Church to get into action.

Making all allowances for modern conditions, our variable climate and other difficulties, it does seem rather surprising in view of the part which our Lord Himself took in preaching in the open-air that more has not been done by His Church in the open. In view of the fact that our Lord did so much in the open-air, is it not startling that open-air evangelism is viewed with a feeling amounting almost to suspicion in some quarters? Has there been any time in the history of the Church when the possibilities of testimony in the open-air to the saving Power of Jesus Christ has, to any appreciable extent, been placed in the forefront of the work of the Church for the evangelization of the country? In our own day we have the work of the Church Army, not only in the parishes but on evangelistic route marches and in the seaside missions which are subsequently held; and there are other societies doing a certain amount of work in the open-air, on their own special lines. But what of the Church as a whole?

Some congregations do maintain open-air meetings perhaps one night a week throughout a limited number of summer months; but it would probably be quite within the facts to suggest that only one Church in twenty within the Anglican community goes into the open-air to preach the Gospel.

During the Evangelical revival of the eighteenth century, open-air work came to the fore. But it is interesting to look a little at the experience of Whitefield and Wesley. It is true that real religion was at a very low ebb; but Whitefield was a man with the Living Gospel message and, as always, people went to hear him gladly. Such were the crowds which gathered to listen that the churches were not big enough and he started his field preaching. For the most part the Church, frowning on such "enthusiasms" forbade him the pulpit inside; and even Wesley himself, according to some historians, was not at all enthusiastic about this "departure" of Whitehead. It is true that Wesley adopted the method himself a little later on—won by the results of such work. The success of the Wesley revival came largely from its open-air work, the converts being built up by the "class-meetings" and subsequently set to work to win others. Is it too much to expect similar results today?

Surely not! Indeed, if we had faith enough, we ought to believe that results might easily be better. Religion may, in some circles, be considered to be at a low ebb again. But is it? There is less formality in Church attendance than ever before and there is little chance of any preacher finding his church unable to accommodate his congregation. But the popular Press gives abundant evidence that there is, at any rate, some very considerable interest in matters religious. Religion, as distinct from theology, is no longer taboo as a matter of polite conversation; the trend of modern education has brought within the reach of all classes the fact that the discoveries of scientists and their general attitude is complementary to religion whereas forty or fifty years ago the attitude was argumentative and antagonistic. Moreover, it is an age which lives in and likes the open-air, hiking and biking and motoring to an extent unexampled hitherto.

Is the Church to wait for the people to come and listen? Surely it can and should go to the people outside. How can this be done?

One often sees fifty or one hundred people inside a church with two and sometimes three clergymen to conduct the service and preach. Why shouldn't one clergyman be detached from such a "duty" and detailed to hold a meeting simultaneously at the nearest and most convenient corner or park?

But open-air work should primarily be a matter for the laity. Wesley found so many opportunities in the open-air that it became a physical impossibility for him, human giant of physical strength that he was, to do all the work himself. The laity did the work for him. My own experience with open-air meetings in Kensington in 1880 was exactly the same. It became the work for the Church rank and file. Today we are fortunate in having a laity better fitted to do work such as this. It would help the Church to move as a whole if it could bring the laity out to bear its witness; profit would come to individuals, inside and outside the Church, and to the community as well.

It is universally admitted that the electoral strength of the Socialist Party has come from the way in which it has used its rank and file. Such parties realize that elections are not won by a few leaders talking to the "converted" week by week inside the doors of a club. They know that elections, if they are to be won, will be won at the street corners and by door to door visitation. None of the political parties has the advantage of thousands and thousands of preaching stations like the Church has. "Preaching stations" is an incomplete phrase; for the Church has the priceless advantage of being the chosen instrument for our Lord's work; the Sacraments are celebrated and the Word preached to build up and strengthen a Faith which cannot fail. Why then should not the Churches be regarded as "barracks" where Soldiers of the Cross are trained and strengthened, not only for the fight which they must endure as individuals, but for the great missionary work to those outside. "Go ye into all the world." We can't all go to India or China or Africa; but we can go to the street corner and bear our testimony. Church-people properly regard overseas missionary work as the demonstration of a Living Church; people outside the Church do not so regard overseas missionary work and the general tendency is to be a little suspicious of it. But a demonstration at the street corner would show the "outsider" that the Church has got something worth working for and worth talking about.

What should be the type of outside work most likely to produce results bringing conversion to men and women, and men and women back to the Church? Undoubtedly personal witness to the saving Power of our Lord in daily life. The appeal must be from the heart to the heart. Argument can safely be left to the expert; but for the rank and file, personal testimony to personal experience is best. For experience cannot be denied.

More can be done; more should be done; more must be done in the open-air!

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

"The More Abundant Life"

We have been hearing a good deal of late about "The More Abundant Life," but how to reach it, or rather enter into it, is not so clear. It is true that the scientists are giving us promises of a number of wonderful things in the future, such as the conquest of disease and the chemical production of food and many other necessaries of life through juggling with the elements, but these hopeful anticipations are not yet within sight and may not be brought to pass in our own generation.

Christ's Idea of the Abundant Life.

It is significant that the modern slogan:—"The more Abundant Life," is taken from the Gospel of St. John, where our Lord is quoted as saying:—"I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." It is also significant that "The Abundant Life" spoken of by our Lord, is by no means the equivalent of "The Abundant Life" of which we hear so much today, for Christ, in another passage says:—"Take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Nor did He, Himself, in His own life, use His Almighty Power to provide Himself with even life's bare necessities. He was dependent upon the charity of others and He said of Himself, on one occasion, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay His head." In fact, we may say that He showed a complete disregard of what is meant by "The More Abundant Life," promised to us today.

A Different Estimate of Values.

It is therefore quite evident that the life which He came to give to man was of an entirely different kind and one which would prove so satisfying as to render mere earthly possessions hardly worth considering in comparison. We find this clearly exemplified in the life of St. Francis of Assisi, who embraced poverty as being his ideal state of life, because he thought it would bring him into closer relationship with Christ than any other. While we cannot accept this ideal as a practical one for human society, the life of St. Francis did have a wonderful influence throughout Europe in restoring to the world the truth that the higher values of human life must be found, not in material comforts and satisfactions, but in the development of the spiritual side of man's nature, and of its relationship to God. This reminds us of the words of St. Paul when he wrote:—"I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." We have the material goods of life put entirely on one side and sacrificed in order that the higher life of the spirit might be set forward.

An All-Important Question.

What then is "The More Abundant Life," which Christ said that He had come into the world to give to men, and which St. Paul and St. Francis estimated as of such inestimable value? In the first place it meant the opening up of new and vaster possibilities with regard to the higher life of man through the redemption of the soul and its being brought into filial relations with God. That this involved a mighty change in the relationship between man and God may be seen from what our Lord said with reference to St. John the Baptist and the contrast between the spiritual status of man under the Old Dispensation as compared with that of the New. Our Lord's words were:—"Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist; notwithstanding he that is least in the Kingdom of heaven is greater than he." These words seem strange and hard to understand, but this is so because we fail to realize the exalted position to which we have been admitted as members of Christ's Body, and therefore as joint heirs with Him of all the blessings of the Kingdom of God. When we do realize this, we shall understand more fully the vast possibilities which lie open to us as the sons of God and heirs of eternal life.

A Very Important Distinction.

It is necessary to make this absolutely clear, because there is danger lest our minds should come to identify "The Abundant Life" with the material blessings which, however desirable, have no power to give us complete satisfaction as may be proved from the fact that in a single year over fifty millionaires took their own lives, and this happened a few years before the depression. In the second place, "The more Abundant Life," which Christ brought to the world, implies the opportunity which He has given to us all of associating ourselves with Him in the carrying out of His work in the world, that we may become instruments in His hands for bringing untold blessings to mankind.

The Blessing of Service.

The greatest blessing of which human nature is capable is to serve as His chosen vessels through whom His love and power may reach and bless and enrich the lives of multitudes, when we ourselves may only be partially conscious of what we are actually doing. At the present time the world seems to be far more concerned about economics, that is to say the material things of life, than those things which Christ came to give us. But this is a complete reversal of the Divine Order of things, as revealed to us by our Lord Jesus Christ, in unfolding to His Disciples and the multitude the principles of His Kingdom. For we find Him making this clear statement as to the relative values of the spiritual and material things of life:—"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." Just before saying these words, He reminded them that God has made provision for the birds of the air, and added:—"Are ye not much better than they?" A good master sees to it that his servants are properly provided for, but we stand in a closer relationship to God than that for we are His children. Only the other night on the radio, "Religion in the News" gave us this message, that Babson, the well-known expert on matters of business, had recently said, that what the country needed most of all to bring it out of its difficulties was a revival of Religion.

The Kingdom of God and the Second Coming of Christ

By CHARLES W. LOWRY, JR.,

Associate Professor of Systematic Divinity, Virginia Theological Seminary.

With this issue the Reverend Charles W. Lowry, Jr., Ph. D., Associate Professor in the Department of Theology of the Virginia Theological Seminary, begins a series of articles which will run through the season of Advent. Dr. Lowry holds degrees from Washington and Lee, Harvard, Cambridge Theological Seminary and Oxford. After one year in parish work in California he came to his present position. He is widely regarded as one of the leading young clergymen of the Church. The Southern Churchman feels very fortunate in being able to announce this series of articles.

I. THE BACKGROUND.

WE HEAR continuously in church circles and from the pulpit of the Kingdom of God. This has been the case now for several decades. The reason, of course, is that towards the end oof the last century, as the result of the application of the historical method to Christian origins and to the New Testament, the Synoptic Gospels as such were discovered and it was felt that we could and ought to return to the historical Jesus portrayed in them. This Jesus, it was seen, had more to say about the Kingdom of God than almost any other single subject. He came preaching the Kingdom. "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 4:17. Cf. Matt. 3:2, 10:7; Mark 1:15; Luke 4:43).

The centrality of the Kingdom, in the teaching of Jesus, together with an unconscious but definite dogma of inevitable progress, based on the theory of evolution and the rise of a new social consciousness, account for the preoccupation of modern Christianity with the concept of the Kingdom of God. But this preoccupation and the concept generally entertained have been more regulated by the dogma of progress and social idealism than by the full teaching of the Synoptic Gospels. This teaching contains a large element that scholars describe as eschatological: that is, referring to last things or the end of the world. It seems to be related to a particular type of eschatology known as apocalyptic, of which the Apocalypse or Revelation of St. John the Divine is an instructive though a later example. The essence of apcoalyptic is that the end of the age is near and that God will speedily intervene in history, bringing to an end the existing order of things and setting up a new order in which He shall reign, His will be done. Modern teaching in sharp contrast to this has been this-worldly and evolutionary. The Kingdom of God is to be the term of the normal world-order, the climax in society of that progressive development beginning with the advent of life in unicellular form and resulting, after countless millenniums, in modern civilization.

The Church, as the collects, epistles, and gospels of the Advent season will soon remind us once more, took up a standpoint in between apocalyptic and evolution. It accepted the full teaching of the New Testament on the Kingdom of God with one slight but far-reaching qualification. Where the general position of the New Testament is, as Prof. F. C. Burkitt has said, that described in Luke 19:19: "They thought that the Kingdom of God should immediately appear," the Church postponed indefinitely the final judgment and the complete reign of God. But it did expect both and never rejected the eschatologoy of the New Testament. And the idea that made possible this solution, that was sufficiently elastic to bridge over the indefinite prolongation of the interval between the original proclamation of the Kingdom and its eventful fulfilment, was the second coming of Christ. The Apostles Creed here as on so many points records with the utmost succinctness the thought of the Church:

> "And in Jesus Christ His only Son our Lord: who was conceived . . . born . . . sitteth on the right hand of God . . . from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead."

IN THE ADVENT SEASON the Church through the Prayer Book directs our thought to repentance, the Kingdom of God, judgment, and the coming again of Jesus Christ. The faithful Churchman will hear again at this time what the New Testament says on these themes. And as pointed out at the beginning of the present article, the Kingdom of God is a phrase that is constantly on the lips or ringing in the ears of most of us during much of the year. But though we continue to talk as people did twenty to thirty years ago, the world around belies our speech. The signs of the coming of the Kingdom on the earth—here and now—are far from encouraging. It will be some time before we recapture the mood of phrases like, "The Evangelization of the world in this generation," "Make the world safe for democracy," "A war to end war," and (is it not true?—the exhortation of Christian Everyman), "Let us bring in the Kingdom of God". All this makes clear thinking on the whole subject desirable and indeed imperative, and constitutes the justification of the writer, as greatly daring and by request of one of the editors of the Southern Churchman, he attempts in overbrief compass to treat of these high and difficult themes.

In concluding this first article, which has as its aim indicating both the present and the original background, let us look again and more carefully at the antecedents and setting of the conceptions of the Kingdom and the return of Christ in the New Testament.

The phrase "the Kingdom of God" is in itself a simple one. It means the reign of God or the sphere of the Divine Sovereignty. Moffatt translates it "the realm of God" (or Heaven: which is a circumlocution for the Divine Name used especially by St. Matthew, who here, as in other respects, displays a particularly Jewish point of view). Behind the phrase and the idea which it denotes is the great Biblical conception of a theocracy. This is the thought of a rule of God, first within the limits of the Jewish people and state, then of the whole earth, through God's chosen people, Israel. The idea should be narrowly nationalistic or nobly universalistic; and in the Old Testament we find both tendencies given expression. It was the latter, however, which gripped the great prophets, and we find them translating their ideals, which are grounded in a vision of transcendent moral reality, into poetry that takes the form of a picture of a perfect social order. Wars will cease; universal peace will be the order of the world. Prosperity will abound. Even nature will be transformed: the lion and the lamb will lie down together. The knowledge of the glory of God will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

The dream did not materialize. History was rough on the Jewish people. Much of our Old Testament is the record of the tragic but often profoundly moving and intensely and deeply religious effect of adversity and suffering upon the souls of this people from the sack of Jerusalem and the great captivity (586 B. C.), to the invasion of Jerusalem and profanation of the Temple by Antiochus Epiphanes (169 B. C.). Then came the period of the Maccabees, with their heroic but eventually futile efforts to revive the independence and power of the Jewish kingdom. Finally in 63 B. C., with Pompey's successful siege of Jerusalem, Jewry came under the Roman yoke.

OUT OF THIS historical tragedy—and the intellectual questionings and reasonings to which it gave rise—was born the apocalyptic conception of the Kingdom of God. The heart of the concept was that history would draw to a sudden and dramatic climax, which would be the prelude to a new order of things: the Kingdom of God. The present evil order was doomed: nothing could save it. But the pessimism seemingly inherent in such a conclusion was made the basis of a profound optimism. For since God was, one could be sure that evil and iniquity represented but a passing phase. One could be certain there was a good time coming. But the implication was clear that only God could and would usher in such a time. The Kingdom would be the result of a Divine intervention. Thus the nerve of apocalyptic was the faith that God had not abdicated His power and that He was the ultimate determiner of history. It was the faith that > "Though the cause of evil prosper,

> Yet, behind the dim unknown,
> Standeth God within the shadow
> Keeping watch above his own."

But the form—the temporal and schematic mould common to varying apocalypses or prophetic word-pictures of final things—arose from the belief that the times were growing late and that therefore the Kingdom of God was at hand.

A word, finally, on Apocalypses and the relation of the Messiah to the Kingdom. The first and most influential of the Jewish Apocalypses is the canonical Book of Daniel (written probably not long after 168 B. C.) In one of the visions of Daniel described in this book there is a verse of crucial importance:

> "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, there came with the clouds of heaven one like unto a son of man" (7:13).

The same figures reappears in a work in part based on Daniel and written around 100 B. C.—the "Similitudes of Enoch" (Book of Enoch, 37-71). The "one like a son of man" has in Enoch become "the Son of Man," a pre-existent heavenly being who "sits on the throne of His glory" and is to judge even the potentates and kings of the earth. But this Son of Man has no earthly career; his appearance and work as Judge and King follow the end of the old order and the bringing in by God of the new age. In this respect the Enochic concept of the Messiah is typical. The same point holds for the Davidic Messiah or human son of David's line who was to be placed again on the throne of Israel—the other main line of Messianic expectation. But the Son of David idea, while not without influence on the Evangelical narratives, is not important from the standpoint of Jesus' thinking (see Mark 12:35-37; Matt. 22:41-46; Luke 20:41-44), or from that of the Church's expectation of the return of Him who is Lord and Christ. From both angles it is the concept of the Son of Man that was determinative.

Home---Its Perils and Safeguards

By ARTHUR B. KINSOLVING,

Rector of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, Maryland.

> "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father, from Whom every family in heaven and earth is named."—Ephesians 3:14, 15.

A FEW DAYS AGO at the dedication of Stratford Hall as a national shrine I listened to a very thoughtful address by a man who has lately achieved great distinction as the author of one of our finest American biographies, Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, as he traced the remarkable history of the family whose home was at Stratford for more than two centuries, and pointed out the virtues which explained their almost unrivalled intellectual and spiritual influence through the years.

The house at Stratford is built in the form of an H. It has eight cornerstones instead of four. The speaker took the H to stand for Home. This was the home of a great family for five or six generations. He recalled that the rise and decline of American families has been epitomized in the phrase, "Three generations from shirtsleeves to shirtsleeves." The continuity of families like the Adamses of New England the Lees of Virginia presents a striking contrast. For over two centuries, from President Thomas Lee, secretary of state for the colony of Virginia in 1649, the Stratford family produced a remarkable succession of men of outstanding ability, integrity and a high sense of public duty. The speaker went on to point out that the stability of the nation rests upon the maintenance of the family, which is today threatened in various and subtle ways.

Among the cornerstones of family life he mentioned these traits as having been illustrated by the people of whom he was speaking:

First, Wise marriages. From this circumstance there resulted a remarkable tradition of physical stamina, intellectual vigor, and moral character. In six generations there was but one scandal and one divorce. What a lesson in a country and an age when so many marriages are made from impulse, with no sober-looking to the future, no thoughtful and reverent questioning as to intellectual and spiritual affinity. How cheap and vulgar are the types of marriages flaunted before the public in this country today!

Then he spoke of the way that good management, good husbandry, was another marked trait. It was not enough to have good blood, there must be thrift and industry; not enough to enter into an inheritance, that inheritance must be lived up to, improved and handed on. He noted next the strong decision of character which marked these men. And then the speaker laid stress on the fine readiness of the men with such a background to give themselves to public duty and high professional service.

PERHAPS the greatest of all the changes affecting modern life is the change in our homes. Only in a small minority of American homes are the great and sounder traditions still carried on. Life does not center in homes as in former years. We rendezvous at home to sleep and at meal-times. Our life does not twine itself about a home as it once did. In some cases the change in inescapable. A lot of people must live in the homes of others. But we are under no necessity of losing so largely the cultus of home in the way that we have done, and the subject is worth considering from the angle of our Lord's example.

Christ Jesus was a member of a race in which the family had for generations been regarded as a great and sacred institution. He came from heights beyond our earthly vision, yet He came into a home. During the Nazareth years He knew both the comfort and the security of a home. Its influence fell with full intensity upon the soul of Jesus. His entire theology was a sort of transfiguration of a true and reverent family life. Before Him God had been conceived of mainly as a Creator and a Judge. The richest and deepest name Jesus had for God was "Father". "When ye pray, Our Father which art in heaven." He ever spoke of God in a filial way, teaching men that God's feelings toward His earthly children are the feelings of the noblest and divinest Father, that He loves, seeks, forgives and redeems. The first miracle that He wrought was at a marriage in a home. Again, when He met a funeral bier and learned that He who lay thereon was "the only son of his mother, and she a widow," He at once invoked His divine power and raised him to life again. He repeated the same miracle at the grave of Lazarus. He watched the little children dancing in the market-place with sympathy and interest. The greatest short story ever uttered was His parable of the boy who left a good home for the far country, became disillusioned and turned home again. He repeatedly gave His disciples glimpses of the intimate and unique bond subsisting between His Father and Himself, declaring that the "Father loveth the Son, and showeth Him all things that He Himself doeth." And yet at other times He expressed a beautiful, filial dependence upon the Father's will, and a readiness to wait patiently until that will might be fully revealed. "Father, let this cup pass away from Me, nevertheless not My will, but Thine be done." During the last week of His life He found sweet refuge in the home at Bethany with three friends, Mary, Martha and Lazarus, whose loyalty symbolizes the immortality of love, and on the cross He recognized the deepest claims of home ties when He committed His mother in her agony of sorrow to the care of the beloved disciple.

IN ALL the history of time none has ever hallowed home-relations like Jesus Christ. All through His life you feel the power and influence of that Nazareth home. In later life, when His great public mission had begun, He had to leave that home and become a wanderer. He said, you remember, "Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head." But none-theless His language was always eloquent of home. God was ever His Father, and men were God's children, needing forgiveness and strength, needing light and hope and joy. And St. Paul, himself a home-exile for the Gospel's sake, caught up the great home words and said: "For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father, from Whom every family in heaven and earth is named."

It is rather unfortunate that the homes of which we hear most today are quarrelsome homes, noisy homes, broken homes. "The most beautiful homes in the world are for the most part silent homes." They give forth no loud sounds. It is the tragic homes of which we hear. These are played up luridly in our day to tease the jaded faculties of men. The deformities, the miscarriages, the criminal and disgraceful aspects of modern homes are becoming more familiar to the rising generation than the loyalty and serenity of the thousands of homes in which the spirit of Christ abides. One fears at times that this constant presentation of scandals, quarrels, divorces, and all sorts of impulsive disloyalties, may lead the young to believe that this is the to-be-expected thing in family life. There is so much of it, and it is served up in such infinite variety, that the natural inference might easily be that it is idle to expect to have life on a higher level.

I THINK there was never a time when there was need for more definite character-building work at home than now. A few days ago I was with a group of clergymen who were talking over some of their parish problems, when one of them spoke with deep feeling of the loss in recent years of what is known as the family pew, that is, the pew that used to be filled with all members of the family. Quite often now heads of families will explain the absence of the young people on the ground that they were out late on Saturday evening, so they had not disturbed them. The biggest parties are now given on the eve of the Lord's Day, and when they keep young people out until the small hours of Sunday morning, the whole influence of God's Day is neutralized. It is the fashion now for people to wait until late in the evening of Saturday before they start to parties, and only a few have the conscience to leave at an hour which will safeguard the integrity of the Lord's Day.

It is easy to see that this turning Sunday into a day in which people sleep off in the early hours the weariness of Saturday night is robbing the day of its message and its power. The witness for the sanctity of the home found in the parish church, with its font, reminding us of baptismal vows, its sanctuary of prayers, its altar, that forever tells us of the cost of our redemption, is a divine and uplifting influence in our lives. People may pass it by and neglect it, but in crises they are again reminded of it. You know home is still home even when children have strayed far away. Jesus was never ashamed of Nazareth. We read that in the midst of His great mission "He came to Nazareth where He was brought up." What memories must have flowed in upon His mind and soul! There was a simplicity in that carpenter's home, where He had succeeded Joseph the breadwinner after his death. There was a deep religious reality there, an atmosphere which He loved. Joseph seems to have been a very noble father-type. And the Blessed Mary elicited always the filial tenderness and thought of her divine Son. All was not perfect in that home. There were brethren in the home who "did not believe on Him," who probably said, "Behold this dreamer cometh," as the brethren of Joseph had said of old time. Doubtless there was a sting of pain in this mistrust and unbelief. It reminds us that injury does not always come from people outside, that a "man's foes may be," at times, "those of his own household"; that the finest, most godlike characters sometimes both in homes and in the Church of God are not fully appreciated for what they are. Then the horizon of the home ought not always to bound our vision. Our Lord said that for His kingdom sake a man must sometimes "leave father and mother and sisters and brethren." He Himself had done this. And yet it was true that the language of His theology was the language of home, and it is forever true that the Christian home is the institution which has felt His deepest influence, and that our religion must begin there.

My friends, if the habit of prayer in your home has been discontinued, reestablish it for your own and your children's sake. If your children have dropped out of the family pew, on whatsoever pretext, try to bring them back. It may be that seeing your faith, your staunch, unyielding belief in the reality and preciousness of divine worship and God's altar, they may come back and bow the knee at your side. Pray about it, think about it, adhere to those standards you have inherited. Do not imagine that any other kind of success can ever rank with this. Look onward to the day when you can stand before your God and say, "Here, Lord, am I and the children Thou hast given me."

Tuberculosis-A Challenges to Youth

By LOUISE STRACHAN,

Director, Child Health Education, National Tuberculosis Association.

"HE WHO HAS health has hope, and he who has hope has everything," runs an old Arabian proverb.

Hope is characteristic of youth, and health has long been regarded as one of youth's prerogatives. Yet, for countless ages tuberculosis has been reaping a rich harvest in the field of youth. That it existed in the days of Egypt's greatness is proved by the evidence found in recently unearthed mummies. Tuthankhamen, whose tomb in the Valley of the Kings was excavated in 1922, and whose age at death was not more than eighteen, appears to have died of tuberculosis. The disease has never been a respecter of persons: prince and pauper, poet and peasant, one and all have suffered its ravages.

Tuberculosis seemed an invincible foe, and indeed it was until the genius of Koch discovered the cause of the disease—a tiny rod shaped germ known as the tubercle bacillus. This happened but half a century ago, in 1882, and since that time, when a real offensive was launched against this ancient enemy of mankind, the number of lives lost because of tuberculosis has steadily decreased. The tubercle bacillus is on the run! We know more about him today than has ever been known before in the history of the world. We know enough to abolish the disease and the question is not "Can we?" but "Will we?"

MEDICAL IMMORTALS

Successful progress in the fight against tuberculosis is made possible chiefly by the discoveries of these three men. Robert Koch (left) noted German research worker, discovered the tubercle bacillus and proved it was the cause of tuberculosis in 1882. Rene Theophile Hyacinthe Laennec (center) young French medical genius, invented the stethoscope in 1815. When only 45 he became a victim of the disease he did so much to help conquer. Wilhelm Konrad Roentgen (right) noted German physicist, discovered in 1885 what is probably the most important diagnostic aid in modern medicine—the X-ray.

Here lies the challenge to youth. The fight cannot be won without the wholehearted interest and support of high-school and college students, for in their group, between ages 15 and 24, tuberculosis still triumphs in its old role of "Captain of the men of Death." Most young people possess courage—it is twin to hope—and will face facts. The cold, hard fact of the matter is that tuberculosis causes more deaths among young people, between 15 and 24 than any other disease. What are they going to do about it? If they do nothing, how can the fight be won?

WHAT can they do about it? First, learn the facts: Tuberculosis is preventable. It is curable. It is not herditary. It is a communicable disease spread only by close contact with a person whose sputum is filled with tubercle bacilli. Second, know the weapons with which the disease is being fought: the tuberculin test, a harmless skin test which reveals the presence of infection; the X-ray, which shows the degree of infection and disease; the sanatorium, and the surgical methods of treatment. Also learn the importance of the practice of good daily health habits, which help prevent the disease from developing. There's a reason for adequate rest, well-balanced meals, fresh air, and exercise!

How can this be done? The National Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated associations are hard at work on this problem of youth. The tuberculin testing of high-school and college students is spreading rapidly in all sections of the country and the interest and support of high-school and college officials in this work is indicative of their recognition of its importance. The first national conference on college hygiene, held at Syracuse University in 1931, laid down specific recommendations for the inauguration and conduct of an adequate tuberculosis program among college students, which includes not only tuberculin testing and X-raying, but also routine instruction in the personal and community aspects of the disease. This conference, sponsored by the American Student Health Association and the National Health Council, initiated by the National Tuberculosis Association, and its Proceedings were published by the same organization. Now plans are under way for another conference to be held in 1936 to review the recommendations of the Syracuse meeting and strengthen and improve them in the light of five years' experience. The National Tuberculosis Association is closely associated with this undertaking also.

IN the high-school field much headway is being made. Field trips to local clinics and sanatoria arranged by tuberculosis associations for high-school students are being successfully carried on with the wholehearted support of school authorities. The lively interest shown by the students and the batteries of questions that have been turned upon the leaders of the expeditions prove once again that "youth will face facts" and is eager to know the whys and the wherefores of things. Viewing the tubercle bacillus under a microscope is a thrilling experience and the student who has done so is likely to become a missionary in the cause of spreading the facts about tuberculosis. A friendly talk with the superintendent of the local sanatorium and a visit with him to the X-ray room will familiarize the young adolescent with the weapons used in the fight against this preventable disease and dispel any lurking fears he may be harboring. It is indeed curious how many otherwise intelligent adults still possess an unreasoning fear of tuberculosis. It is, of course, a "hangover" from the old days when a diagnosis of tuberculosis meant tragedy.

Will you accept this challenge? Will high-school and college students lend a hand to speed the fight, win the victory and place tuberculosis in the limbo of ancient and forgotten diseases that have plagued humanity? The campaign is financed by the annual sale of tuberculosis Christmas Seals, a penny each, so everyone may have a share. Buy and use these Christmas Seals. They are messengers of health and hope and happiness; they tell of the courage and faith which has insured the success of the fight thus far. But besides sharing in the purchase of these little stickers, learn the facts about tuberculosis and help your local, state and national tuberculosis associations in their efforts to spread the truth about this preventable, curable, communicable disease.

EXCUSED FROM GIVING TO MISSIONS.

Those who believe that the world is not lost and does not need a Saviour.

Those who believe that Jesus Christ made a mistake when He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

Those who believe that the Gospel is not the power of God, and cannot save the heathen.

Those who wish that missionaries had never come to our ancestors, and that we ourselves were still heathen.

Those who believe that it is "every man for himself," in this world, and who, with Cain, ask, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Those who want no share in the final victory of Christ.

Those who believe they are not accountable to God for the money entrusted to them.

Those who are prepared to accept the final sentence: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

—Horace Bushnell.

VALUES.

Stephen F. Reade.

The race is not always to the swift, nor is achievement always to the brilliant. Determination is generally a controlling factor in the final results.

So in character, it is not necessarily the genius for courtesy, nor the one who, under the inspiration of a crisis, acts the part of a hero, who reaches the heights.

But, the peak is reserved for that one, who so esteems his values, that he lays hold of them with a grip of steel even though that grip bind him to a cross.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys

Conditions Call for Study and Contemplation

Reporting to the Woman's Auxiliary executive board at its recent meeting, Miss Grace Lindley, executive secretary, said in part:

"As I see it, two imperatives press us. The first is to think through present conditions to possible action on the problems of peace and war and on the problems of present-day missions. . . . .

"Among the questions which must be considered in a new thinking into the mission of the Church are those of unity, of cooperation, of the personnel needed, of methods for awakening the interest of the Church in her mission, and of finding funds for her work.

"If we are to contribute to the solution of such questions, we should be reading and thinking carefully and deeply . . . . And while we need material on which to base the thinking, we need most of all quiet in which to do it.

"So I am brought to the second imperative. We must seek deeper knowledge of God. If we believe, as I suppose we do, that God is in history, there can be little more important than finding out what He wants done now. And if we believe that He uses His creatures in the working out of His will, there can be nothing more important for us than to let Him make us fit for His use. And how can we know Him except by contemplation and adoration?"

From the Archbishop of York's new book, "Nature, Man, and God," Miss Lindley quoted: "Life can not be fully integrated about the self as center; it can only be fully integrated when it becomes God-centered. For God is the real center of the real world; His purpose is its controlling principle; only in Him therefore can all creatures find a center which brings them all to harmony with one another and with themselves . . . ."

School Built by United Thank Offering Receives Gift.

Members who are somewhat familiar with the disposition made of the United Thank Offering received at the Triennial Meetings, will recall that at one time $10,000 was sent to Japan for building a school. By turning to the Woman's Auxiliary leaflet, "A Record and a Hope" (W. A. 106) it will be seen it was in 1907, at the Triennial Meeting held in Richmond, Virginia, that this amount was reserved for the building of a training school for Bible women in Sendai, Japan.

One of the many interesting features of our missionary work is trying to trace its growth and expansion, in size, number, and influence, as the years pass.

This week there has come, through the Washington Diocese, news which must be of interest to every woman who contributes to the United Thank Offering and particularly to those who had a part in the offering of 1907.

It is an acknowledgment of a gift of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Alban's, Washington, D. C., to Aoba Jo Gakuin, Sendai, Japan, and excerpts from this letter written by Helen Boyle, principal, are given here:

"Several days ago I received from Bishop Binsted a draft in Yen to the amount of the $500 which was given by the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Alban's Church in memory of Mrs. Weeks. The money has been deposited in accordance with the wish of the donors and the Bishop has given me permission to use the interest for Aoba Jo Gakuin.

"Aoba Jo Gakuin is our only mission school in Tohoku. We think it is very important. It was founded as a Training School for Evangelistic Workers, usually called 'Bible women' in English. It was given $10,000 from the United Thank Offering, with which to build new buildings.

"About ten years ago a department for the training of Kindergarten teachers was added. Last year we reorganized and closed the Bible department and today the school is entirely a training school for Kindergarten teachers. It is the only Christian Kindergarten Training School in Tohoku and for that reason serves not only our own Church, but others as well.

"We take girls who are high school graduates and Christians, or have an understanding of what Christianity is. Our aim is to train these girls to be faithful teachers. Our course of study includes the regular curriculum of a Kindergarten Training School, and Bible, Church History, Personal Religion, and Christian Ethics as well.

"This gift from the women of St. Alban's Church will make possible a tuition scholarship. It has been my wish for some time to have a scholarship which might be given at the end of the first year to the student who had best shown scholarship ability, an understanding of the ideals of the school, and a spirit of cooperation and real effort in her work. I feel that a scholarship of that kind will help to keep the girls up to the standard we want them to attain, but which is high for Japanese girls. This gift will make such a scholarship possible."

Surely the growth and far-reaching influence of this United Thank Offering gift to Sendai, give cause for rejoicing. We can but think of how widespread and unending is the influence of the many Bible women trained there throughout these years and of the possibilities of the large work now being carried on as outlined in the foregoing message. How it stirs the imagination! How could one even estimate the doors of opportunity which this one gift has opened for the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom in the world?

Principles of Giving Are Listed.

From James Thayer Addison's "Our Expanding Church," the following principles are given as those set forth at the Jerusalem Conference, a meeting which brought together the leaders at home and abroad of all the Protestant and Anglican Churches:

1. Giving should always be an act of worship.
2. We should avoid allowing any plan for raising money to become mechanical and impersonal.
3. The presentation of missionary needs should as far as possible include the specific requirements of definite fields and branches of work, in order that the personal knowledge, interest, and concern of the individual supporter may be increased.
4. To aid those who administer missionary work, giving must be regular and loyally sustained.
5. More givers are more important than more money, and in the long run will mean more money.
6. Any method for stimulating giving will always need to be supplemented by most thorough education of the people in the nature and purposes of the giving.

O THOU who are the light of the minds that know Thee, the life of the souls that love Thee, and the strength of the hearts that serve Thee; help us so to know Thee that we may truly love Thee; so to love Thee that we may fully serve Thee, whom to serve is perfect freedom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

BISHOP GRAVES SEES DISASTER AHEAD FOR CHINESE CHURCH—SHANGHAI AN EXAMPLE.

Shanghai, China.—The Rt. Rev. Frederick R. Graves, D. D., Bishop of Shanghai since 1893, issues the following statement concerning the work in his District:

"As a result of the action in reducing appropriations in the Missionary District of Shanghai by a cut of $10,000 (U. S. currency) on the reduced budget of 1934, a difficult situation arose which had to be carefully considered by the Bishop and Council of Advice. We had to decide whether to close abruptly existing work and dismiss workers, or to devise some plan for carrying on.

"It was evident that stations once closed would probably never be reopened. Furthermore, the large amount of the cut could not be covered in this way, because the evangelistic work is carried on with virtually no margin and very small appropriations to each station. To close down evangelistic work meant irreparable damage and the dismissal of faithful Chinese workers.

Schools and Hospitals Suffer.

"It was therefore decided to lay the burden upon the educational and medical work for the reason that the institutions concerned had, in every case, an income outside the appropriation from home. It was a stern necessity and the result was that all hospitals, St. John's University, and St. Mary's Hall were cut—in some cases one hundred per cent.

"However, the most serious difficulty from which we are suffering is that we get no re-enforcements from home. When you consider that the Rev. Hollis Smith is the latest arrival of the clergy and that he came to China in 1922, the difficulty of the situation is apparent. I have again and again reported this state of things to the National Council but no help has come. The seriousness of the situation can hardly be exaggerated.

Missionaries Gravely Affected.

"The missionaries affected by the grave reductions of appropriations have met the situation in the very best spirit. It is impossible to deny, however bravely facts are faced, that there is a feeling among us that the Church is not back of us as it used to be.

"We have no complaint to make, but we would ask that full consideration should be given to the fact that, although we have been able up to the present to hold our line the process cannot be repeated much longer. If we have to face similar conditions in 1936 I see nothing for it but to dismiss our workers and close stations. Once that is done the Church will have lost the confidence of the Chinese Christians and irreparable harm will result."

There are fifteen and one-half million rural white people in America who are not members of any religious body. These constitute one of the most pressing missionary problems of today. The Church must become more rural-minded.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

PRAYER FOR IDAHO.

O Lord, our Heavenly Father, we pray Thee to guard and to guide the Bishop and his staff of the missionary district of Idaho, and draw us into closer fellowship with them. Dispose the hearts of all Thy children everywhere to give gladly as Thou hast given to us, that Thy Kingdom may be hastened, and that Thy will may be done on earth as it is done in Heaven. Grant that in the spirit of humility, and that in the full purpose of a good intention, we may serve Thee more earnestly in the time to come; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

NEVADA MAKES DEFINITE PLANS FOR AN EFFECTIVE FORWARD MOVEMENT PROGRAM.

Reno, Nevada.—Recommending an "All Nevada Mission," a Committee on the Forward Movement has brought in a report at its recent meeting, with suggestions as to how the program should be carried out in the District, as follows:

1. That the Church is in the world but not necessarily of it, and that the Church through its leaders and then through the people must stand out for Christ above Caesar.

2. Regular corporate communions of parochial groups, with both corporate and individual preparation for the same.

3. To develop a spirit of fellowship on a large scale, parochial and interparochial, of men, women, and young people.

4. To give a fresh consideration of the value of information and publicity. Use the local papers, bulletin boards, and such other methods as may seem practical and dignified, and to set apart a definite period of not less than two weeks to make a systematic canvass for subscriptions to the Church weeklies.

5. To conduct a preaching mission in every parish during Advent.

6. Make wide use of the Forward Movement literature, using it in preaching and teaching and to encourage others to read and use it, but do not give it away; create a desire for it by selling it. Aim high, and never give up.

This program may be made effective by enlisting the cooperation as far as possible of every individual and organization in the District.

BISHOP HULSE REVIEWS CUBAN WORK AND CITES DANGERS MET BY MISSIONARIES.

Havana, Cuba.—Against a background of continual unrest and hardship among the Cuban people, a background that has varied all the way from dull despair at lack of food and prevalence of disease to the sharp terrorism of bloodshed and bombing, Bishop Hulse reviews the Church's Work in Cuba.

"These are the conditions," he writes, "under which the work of the Church has been carried on. It has made the work of the missionaries difficult. Travel is uncomfortable and dangerous, and most of our missionaries are in charge of several places so that they have to travel from one place to another. I was held up at the point of the bayonet by soldiers twice one night going from Cespedes to Camaguey.

Missionaries Carry On.

"In the face of these difficulties the missionaries have carried on bravely and diligently. They have traveled on foot and on horseback, by automobiles and busses, and to some extent have used the railroad. The Archdeacon of Camaguey (the Ven. J. H. Townsend) has to visit twelve places in the course of each month. One of our missionaries goes to five places each week. . . . The work in Guantanamo suffered greatly during the year due to the absence of a resident minister. I sent the Rev. Romualdo Gonzalez there in November and since then the congregations have filled the church at both the Spanish and English services.

Rural Work Grows.

"The town of Moron is desperately poor, but the Church's work is growing there. The mission has a school building and a rectory, but the church which was also included in the original plan is now greatly needed. The missionary, the Rev. Ramon C. Moreno, has done a notable work establishing mission stations in the country around. He had 576 baptisms during the year, nearly all in rural places which he has to visit on horseback.

"Rural work is important in the province of Matanzas also, centering at Bolondron under the charge of the Rev. Vicente A. Tuzzio. He presented 150 candidates for confirmation, and in the circuit centering at Cardenas, the Rev. Jorge H. Piloto presented 61.

Exodus of Americans.

"In Havana the exodus of English and Americans continues. Dean Blankingship had to remove the names of 97 families from his Cathedral list during the year, a net loss of over 60. Tourists who used to flock to the church in good years no longer come to Havana. They contributed generously to our communion alms, and now that the demands for charity are increased, the offerings have diminished."

From Copenhagen the chaplain of St. Alban's English Church reports that the American Minister to Denmark, Mrs. Ruth Bryan-Owen, is a generous supporter of St. Alban's and officiates as a Church warden. (Denmark, in 1924, was the first country to have a woman member of the Cabinet.)

Christmas Program

Leader: Our program this evening consists of a Christmas carol, a paper on "THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT", and a game of questions and answers on Christmas. We will choose sides and I will appoint captains. Then I will ask the questions. Each question will be asked until someone answers it. If no one can answer it, I will read the answer and come back to it later. Each question answered counts for the side that answers it. I will keep track of the questions answered with a pencil. Those taking part are:

..... to read the carol Hymn No. 551.
..... to read the paper.
..... captains to choose sides.

The Christmas Spirit.

Christmas Day is, of course, the birthday of Jesus, and has been kept always as a feast of joy and happiness. Practically every Christmas story we read tells of how people who, at the beginning of the story, are sad and selfish, at the end catch the spirit of Christmas and give presents to other people, especially the poor, and so are made happy themselves.

One of the best of these is Dickens' Christmas Carol. In it, old Scrooge, who is a very mean and selfish old man, has three spirits come to see him. One is the Ghost of Christmas Past, one of Christmas Present and one of Christmas yet to come. Christmas Past shows him how happy he was as a boy when he kept Christmas by making other people happy. Christmas Present shows how happy today when they are friendly to everyone; and Christmas yet to come shows how Scrooge may be completely forgotten because hs is so selfish that no one can care for him. In the end of the story, Scrooge determines he is going to try to make everyone happy on Christmas, and so he immediately sends a big turkey to his poor clerk, Bob Cratchet, and looks up his nephew, who had asked him to come to Christmas dinner. So the Spirit of Christmas may be said to be to try to make other people as happy as we can.

Questions.

1. Why do we give Christmas presents?

Ans.: Because of the first Christmas present to the world, the Infant Jesus.

2. Why do people think of Santa Claus on Christmas?

Ans.: Because Santa Claus is the German name for St. Nicholas, a Greek saint who taught people about Christ and how to keep Christmas.

3. Why do we have Christmas trees?

Ans.: It was an old German custom to hang presents on the oak in honor of Tjor, their heathen god, and missionaries pointed out that oaks die in winter, but the fir or cedar or pine are green, so we hang decorations on it in honor of our God, who keeps all things alive.

4. Why do we sing carols on Christmas?

Ans.: Because people always wrote and sang songs on feast days, and Christmas is a great feast day.

5. What does the word "Noel" we sing in Christmas hymns mean?

Ans.: It is the French word for Christmas.

6. Do all countries tell of Santa Claus?

A. No; the French call him Father Christmas.

7. Why does Santa dress in red?

Ans.: Because St. Nicholas lived in the North, and people liked bright colors there as a contrast to the snow.

8. Why does Santa drive reindeer?

Ans.: Because in Russia the reindeer and not the horse was the beast of burden.

9. What is the significance of the burning fire on Christmas cards?

Ans.: In the middle ages the nobles sent the men out to get the Yule log. As long as this was unburned the servants had holiday.

10. What does Yule mean?

Ans.: It is the Scandinavian word for Christmas.

11. How long does the Church keep the Christmas season?

Ans.: Until the feast of the Epiphany.

12. When is the feast of the Epiphany?

Ans.: January 6.

13. What does Epiphany commemorate?

Ans.: The coming of the Wise Men to see Jesus.

14. Did not the Wise Men come on the first Christmas?

Ans.: No, the Bible says, Herod inquired when the Star appeared, and later killed all children two years old and under. So Jesus was about two years old when the Wise Men came.

15. Why do we have snow scenes on Christmas cards?

Ans.: Because Europeans are accustomed to think of snow at Christmas time.

16. Did the heathen have any feast at Christmas time?

Ans. Yes, it came close to the shortest day of the year, December 22.

17. Why did the heathen keep this as a feast?

Ans.: Because they considered it the proof that when days got longer, summer was on its way.

18. How did the heathen keep Christmas Day?

Ans.: By eating and drinking, liquor.

19. How should Christians observe the day?

Ans.: The word Christ-mas shows, mass being the old world for church-going, and Holy Communion.

20. Why do we have a midnight service on Christmas Eve?

Ans.: Because of the tradition that Jesus was born at midnight.

21. Why do we sometimes have a boar's head on Christmas cards?

Ans.: Because on Christmas Day people liked to eat the wild boar.

22. Give another reason for a boar's head on Christmas cards?

Ans.: Because eating the boar, or wild pig, showed they were Christians, not Jews.

23. Why do we have holly on Christmas cards?

Ans.: Because holly does not drop its leaves, and so is an emblem of eternal life.

24. Why is the poinsetta called the Christmas flower?

Ans.: Because it blooms at Christmas, when people in the North like to give it in pots as presents.

25. Do French children hang up stockings?

Ans.: No.

26. What do French children do instead of hanging up stockings?

Ans.: They put shoes outside the door for Father Christmas to put a coin in.

27. Why do we have candles in windows on Christmas?

Ans.: Another German custom, to show we want to welcome the Holy Family and not be like Bethlehem and send them to a stable.

Youth and Good Will.

There's a faint, faint glow in the distance,
Though the sky hangs dark with night.
There's a bright, bright flare through the sullen glare,
And a strangely streaming light.

There's a dim, dim sound growing stronger,
As of feet pressing toward the goal;
We can feel the throb of their march toward God;
For 'tis Youth, who has seen life whole.

O arise in might, Youth, and robe thee
With the mantle of peace, all white;
And then, girded with love, by thy fellowship prove
That thy vision is truth and right.

So march on in the flush of thy courage,
And let those who are strong take thy stride,
Till the youth of all lands shall warmly clasp hands;
Then Peace and Good Will may abide.

The Really Poor Man.

A man is poor:
If he is without friends.
If he has lost his self-respect.
If his morals are questionable.
If he has lost his grip upon himself.
If he is selfish, uncharitable or cruel.
If his mind and soul have been neglected.
If he has traded away his character for money.
If making money has crowded out the cultivation of his spiritual life.
If all his investments and possessions are laid upon earth and he has no treasures in heaven.

BOOK REVIEWS

HOPELESS—YET THERE IS HOPE: By Dr. Arno C. Gaebelein. Cloth. Pp. 193. Published by Our Hope, 456 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Price, $1.

In this volume, Dr. Gaebelein has reached the pinnacle of his scholarly and monumental studies of conditions in our agitated age. With keenness of vision, analytical acumen, convincing testimony buttressed by voluminous facts, figures and references from widely differing sources, he has swept the horizon, discerned the threatening menace to our civilization and found a place and mission for the inigmatical Jew. He convinces us in clear, balanced synthesis that the solution of our present unrest lies in the application of the predictions of the Word of God to the confessedly entangling problems of our distraught humanity.

H. L. Mencken, who cannot be said to have any partial leanings towards the Christian Faith, declared somewhile ago, "If the ministers will read their New Testaments, they will see that the Founder of Christianity outlined the very days in which we live." He referred to the predictions of St. Luke, Chapter 21, in which we find "wars and rumors of wars," "men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

Are we not seeing that the well-intentioned League of Nations is facing an issue which proves its incapacity to prevent war? Can we bring about peace? Certainly we cannot, so long as an unregenerated race with a lust for war, strains at the leash for another bloody holocaust. We recite our belief that "He shall come to judge the quick and the dead." Do we really think so? Is not the anguished world crying out for the "Prince of Peace"? Do we dare to array ourselves with that numerous company which spiritualizes or allegorizes the plain statements of the prophecies and complacently utters the consolation, "all's well"?

Let us be honest with ourselves and get into line with Dr. Gaebelein, beholding with his perspective, partaking of his sympathies, reaching out unto his grasp of potentialities, yet to be expressed, and which the statesmen of the day are fruitlessly seeking to evoke by the humanely, but impotent efforts of treaties, leagues, courts and councils.

To miss this book is to court negligible lack of information, inspiration and an intelligent comprehension of world perplexities and possibilities. Do get it.

HOME-SPUN: By Olive Pangburn Katz. Art Paper. Pp. 62. Published by The Wm. B. Eerdsmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Price, 40c.

BEAUTY FOR ASHES: By W. G. Polack. Art Paper. Pp. 56. Same publisher and price.

Home-Spun, a collection of verses and poems, original, offers a thoughtful interpretation of things usually taken for granted. Who has been moved to ask Little Boy Blue how he came to be asleep? or Why Jack Spratt and his wife did not divide the lean and the fat? Mrs. Katz takes just such trifling things to which we have all been accustomed without analysis, and puts upon them a truly philosophical and entrancing revelation of life and its problems. Possibly no one has ever considered the task which she has so genuinely and humanly worked out.

The introduction by our esteemed friend, Dr. Robert G. Lee, in which he affirms his conviction that Mrs. Katz has given us a classic, lends weight to this contribution to a field of intelligent research, novel and attractive. A very good book for a Christmas gift.

Beauty for Ashes is a book of poems dealing with life and its varied experiences. These poems are not commonplace and crude. They present thinking and aspiration. Covering the usual themes of our daily calling and their interpretations, they add as well the Nativity, Gethsemane, Calvary, and Easter incidents in our Lord's life.

Another fine book for Christmas giving. It will lift many above the prose and petty things and carry us to the more lofty ideals of our earthly career. We may praise the author for discovering and delineating in poetical phrase the sublime thought that our God, not only saves us from our sins, but by His alchemical power transmutes our losses into gains, our sin and shame into glory.

DIANA: By Mrs. Montayne Perry. Cloth. Pp. 196. Published by The Abingdon Press, New York City. Price, $1.50.

A readable and constructive novel, having as the jacket of the book states, "the background of glamorous Hollywood; modern, rushing Chicago and ancient, colorful Mexico. Primarily concerned with high adventure and romance, the story yet carries the conviction that life's fullest adventures and keenest joys come to those who face its situations with sincerity and accept them with courage and faith."

A suggestive gift for Christmas.

GLAD DAYS IN GALILEE: A Story of the Boyhood of Jesus: By Marian Keith. Cloth. Pp. 141. Published by The Abingdon Press, New York City, N. Y. Price, $1.00.

To young minds the imagination is free to picture all sorts of lovely things about Him who "was made Man." "Being made in the likeness of men," His early days may be framed in settings consistent with a devout spirit. St. Luke alone draws aside the curtain of His boyhood spirit. Far from the absurdities of the Apocraphal Gospels this book carries a vivid and rational atmosphere.

In order that she might add colorful touches to her narrative, the author visited the Galilean hills and the haunts of Nazareth. Another fine book for Christmas giving.

GOD'S PICKED YOUNG MEN: By Henry K. Pasma. Art Paper. Pp. 96. Published by The Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Illinois. Price, 20c.

An attractively presented biography of such Bible characters as Abel, Jacob, Moses, Gideon, Samuel, David, Daniel, Paul, Stephen, and our Lord Himself.

We are aware that to the average mind the juices of interest and instruction were long ago extracted from these outstanding personalities. But here is a presentation fresh and winsome. The only fault we can find is that it gives too much for such a price. For every chapter is a sermon in embryo.

The distinguishing characteristics may be noted as fine diction, clear perception, analytical acumen and a living throb of human interest. The author makes these young men live again in our midst. They are twentieth century men and belong to our times. We greet them, not through the musty past, but the vibrant present.

Every pastor would do well to order a quantity for circulation among his young people; or at least one chapter might be read at the convenings for instruction, inspiration and service.

We cannot too highly commend this effort of a dedicated teacher and sympathetic leader.

SONGS OF SAINTS AND SINNERS: By Alfred G. Rolfe, A. M., Litt. D. Published by Christopher Publishing House, Boston, Mass. Price, $1.50.

This book is written in the language used by the young people of today. The purpose of the book is to make the old Bible stories so attractive that those reading them will want to read the same thing in their Bibles and always remember them.

Some may feel that some of the rhymes are "flippant", but the author's reply is that "in the thoughts of the present generation these characters wear no halo."

CUBBY RETURNS: By Frances Joyce Farnsworth. Published by The Abingdon Press, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Price, $1.

This is a fine little volume of bear stories for children, written by one who had the pleasure of visiting the famous Yellowstone National Wonderland, where she took pictures and observed the habits of young bears. It is really thrilling to read these stories to boys and girls, for the authoress pictorially makes the cubs act like children.

COLLECT FOR THE FIRST SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

Almighty God, give us grace that we may cast away the works of darkness, and put upon us the armour of light, now in the time of this mortal life, in which Thy Son Jesus Christ came to visit us in great humility; that in the last day, when He shall come again in His glorious majesty to judge both the quick and the dead, we may rise to the life immortal, through Him who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the Holy Ghost, now and ever. HONOR.

I would not teach that boy of mine:
That only victory is fine,
Nor preach material success
To him as glorious unless
He gains it with his head erect,
His honor and his self-respect.

I first would have him learn that he
Of self must always victor be,
That failure's not a thing to fear,
If he retains a conscience clear;
That there's more joy in grim defeat,
Than victory that marks a cheat.

I want to teach my boy to choose
The path of honor though he lose;
I'd rather he'd come home at night
And say to me: "I lost the fight,
But I stood up and let it go
And never struck one unfair blow."

The Glory of the Unfathomable.

Part II.

There is yet another depth we cannot fathom suggested by the words of our Saviour: "Again, I leave the world." That, indeed, is a great mystery. He came forth from God. He came into the world. But, after thirty-three years year—eighteen of which were spent in the obscurity of Nazareth—He left the world. And there we are introduced to the thought of His shameful death, His triumphant Resurrection, and His glorious Ascension unto the glory of God.

If we were to ponder these words leisurely, we should come to the conclusion that there must have been some great purpose why He left the world. Why did He not stay longer? He left the world, according to human measurements, when He was quite a young man. Why did He leave it so soon? There can only be one answer: it was because His work was finished: "I have completed the work Thou gavest Me to do."

The very fact that He left the world should be to us a source of profound comfort, for it suggests the completeness of His redeeming mission. There was nothing left undone. He anticipated and perfected everything. We may rest now upon the finished work of Christ. The very fact that He left the world is the guarantee that there is nothing left for us to do except to trust in His redeeming blood.

"No work is left undone,
Of all the Father willed:
His toil, His sorrows, one by one
The Scriptures have fulfilled."

This, in some ways, is the deepest depth of all—that, in that short lifetime, He should have completely adjusted matters between heaven and earth, so that henceforth sinful men, through Him, might be just with God. We are to rejoice upon every remembrance of the finished work of Christ. We can never talk about it too much: we can never be too thankful for it. Although the early disciples must have felt themselves bereft and desolate when He went away, yet the fact that He did go away is clear proof that His work is completed.

So we come to the final depth of the text: "And go to the Father." There we have the suggestion of His exaltation at the Father's right hand. And we are to remember that the Man of Love, the Crucified, is now the glorified Lord in heaven. He is there as our Representative. He took to heaven a glorified body, and all the trumpets sounded for Him on the other side."

In this respect we need to be very careful in our use of religious symbols. Without desiring for one moment to hurt the feelings of those from whom we differ, it must be pointed out that it is profoundly misleading to think of Jesus today in terms of a Crucifix. There is something painful in the sight of a wayside shrine where the Lord Jesus is depicted as a lacerated, broken Man of Sorrows. That is only half the truth. He is gone to the Father. He is exalted at the right hand of the Majesty on high. We do not yet see all things under His feet, but we see Him crowned with glory and honour. Our very worship every Lord's Day is in the name and in the presence of a Risen and Ascended Saviour, and our very desire to be obedient to His claim is the outcome of that great truth.

Here, then, are four profound facts which He Himself set forth. They represent the glory of the unfathomable. But, even though we cannot reach their deepest depths, we can think of them and rejoice in them, for they will give us true views of the Lord Jesus Christ, and they will help us to render Him that kind of service and allegiance of which He is so supremely worthy.

The Poetry of Jesus.

Prof. Moulton, author of "The Modern Readers' Bible," says that Matthew 7:24-27 is the greatest of all short poems. That is praise, indeed, when we consider Tennyson's "Ulysses," Keats' "Ode to a Nightingale," and Shelley's "Ode to a Skylark." But when we read carefully the poetry of Jesus, we find such amazing simplicity and perfection of language and rich and sensuous imagery, such crystalline, clear thought and perfect artistic form, such intensity and moral grandeur, that lovers of supremely great poetry must concur with the estimate of Moulton. "Consider the lilies, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin, and yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." All the elements of a superb short poem are gathered together in that exquisite little gem. Consider the vine and the branches in John 15, the Sower and the Mustard Seed, in Matthew 13, the Sheep and the Goats in Matthew 26, the Good Samaritan in Luke 10, and the Prodigal Son in Luke 15. Jesus was the greatest poet of all times.

The Worst Sin.

Jesus gave no special list of sins. The worst sin, according to Him, was the sin of an unloving heart. Those He condemned most were the people who pretended to be what they were not, the slackers who looked back, and those who made a little child, or anyone weaker than themselves, to stumble. He made personal friendship with many outcasts. In His great story of the sheep and goats the two classes may have had the same doctrines, but nothing was said of that. They were both unaware of having done or failed to do anything special. The one were so selfish that they never noticed that they had been so, and the others so unselfish that it never occurred to them they had done anything of a special character in helping others. But Jesus divided them not according to anything else, but what they had done or failed to do to others.

God's Presence.

If God's people had eyes to discern that inheritance which is their surest possession, they would know that always when life's crises are most acute, when life's experiences are darkest, the luminous presence of the Invisible One shines most brightly and clearly. When light falls upon the path and the goings of life's journeys are all present, He may withdraw Himself into the shadows. It is comforting to know that He manifests Himself according to our need. His arm is ready for us to lean upon in the hard places. When our souls are being tried with the dangers of the untried way, he is within calling distance. This assurance is voiced on every page of the living Word. "As I have been with my servants of old, so will I be with thee."—J. C. Massee, D. D.

The Great Giver.

It is a great day in the Christian's life when he learns that God always gives more than we can ask or think. He may not give the exact thing for which we ask. Often He does not. But He never gives us less, but always more, than we seek. Karl Barth, the great Swiss theologian, in a stirring passage in one of his books, stresses this thought by the use of an illustration. Our Lord, he says, does not come into whatever darkness that may have laid hold upon our soul in order that He may light a candle to push back the blackness a little. He comes rather to turn the night into day; to make life all bright and glorious. It is so in our prayer life. We may not pray well. But when we pray the best we can, God always goes beyond our prayers. He is the Great Giver.

I saw the mountains stand
Silent, wonderful and grand,
Looking across the land
When the golden light was falling
On distant dome and spire;
And I heard a low voice calling,
"Come up higher, come up higher,"
From the lowlands and the mire,
From the mists of earth's desire,
From the vain pursuit of pelf,
From the attitude of self:
"Come up higher."

Stories are told with a magic pen
That is dipped in memory's ink,
And every chapter contains a dream
As a lovely link.

Life is a book we all may read
From beginning until the end,
And between the lines are grief and pain
And a smile to blend.

God is the author who closes the book
When the story of life is done,
The climax arrives and gently fades
With the falling sun.

Lovely Things.

Some time ago in the "British Weekly," published in London, England, there appeared some lists from children, in answer to a question, "What are the loveliest things you know, persons not counted?"

The Southern Churchman, in a late issue, asked its young readers to send us their lists of "loveliest things." The following was sent in by our young friends, Jacqueline and Jeanne Clarke, aged six and eight years, of Pocomoke City, Maryland:

Loveliest Things.

Our church at Easter.
Vespers (a poem by A. G. Milne).
A canoe gliding on the water.
Pink satin ballet slippers.
The feel of silk pajamas.
Moonlight night and stars.
Empire State building.
Violets and hyacinths.
The window over our altar when the sun shines through it (Jesus in the Garden).
The palace of dolls (in a large department store at Christmas).
Sunset on the water.
Grandmother's hair.
Christmas tree ornaments.

By Jacqueline and Jeanne Clarke.

SOME BRAIN TEASERS.

Try This One.

1. Take six matches or toothpicks and make four triangles out of them by placing them together.

Place six pennies in two straight lines so that there are four in each line.

Some Untangling.

These are things we have on Fourth of July: glsfa; inseo; eskmo; rfeicekrcsra; hsmetac.

Riddles.

1. What is it that lives in a little white house, that is very smooth on the outside, has no windows, and when the . . . comes, the house cracks all to pieces?

2. What has arms, legs, no head, can not run and play, but you can sit in its lap?

3. What is it that needs a pen every day, but can not write?

4. What is it that has a bark, but can not make a single sound, always stays by the house, but leaves in the spring?

5. What kind of a bag is it that men have lots of, little boys and girls have some, but a baby hasn't any?

6. What is it that has a round head that you can beat on?

7. What is it that has a long, red jacket, a stringy tail and blows his jacket to pieces on a certain day in the month of July?

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES.

Try This One.

1. Place three of them so they form a triangle. Now place the other three matches at each corner, and stand these up so they come together at the top. You now have one flat triangle and three made by the matches standing up.

2. Place three pennies in a row, then one on either side of the middle one. The sixth penny is placed on the top of the middle penny.

Some Untangling.

Flags, noise, firecrackers, matches.

Riddles.

1. Chicken. 2. Chair. 3. Pig. 4 Tree. 5. Pocket. 6. Drum. 7. Firecracker.

A Dash for Life.

It is 8 A. M. in the Union Station in Chicago; suburban trains are belching forth commuters who rush for their offices. In the midst of the hub-bub and noise there slips into the sheds one of the crack passenger trains from Seattle. From this train there is borne a stretcher on which rests a child, Margaret, two and a half years old.

Margaret, accompanied by her mother and father, is making a desperate dash for life. Exactly two weeks previous to her arrival in the Union Station in Chicago, she and her parents left Tokyo, Japan, on twenty-four hours notice.

The child had been ill for several weeks. The best physicians in Japan had examined her. The father is on the staff of St. Paul's University, Tokyo, and has access to the best medical facilities of the Nippon. At last the difficulty was diagnosed as an obstruction at the base of the brain. No physician in Japan would undertake the delicate operation. And so, with but a fifty-fifty chance that the long trip half way round the world would save the life of the infant, the infant, the mother and father set forth; caught a fast boat from Yokohoma the following day, and started their long trip across the Pacific and then across the United States. Their destination was Boston where at the Children's Hospital one of the greatest brain surgeons in the world was commissioned to undertake the operation.

Fortunately the passage across the Pacific was calm. The child was encased in a frame to prevent undue disturbance of the spine. Seattle was reached; then the crack train was boarded for Chicago; over the mountains the altitude affected the baby and for three nights it was doubtful if she could continue the trip. Train officials were at the command of the desperate mother and father in order to make the trip as easy as possible.

At last, Chicago. Here a little party of friends, also advised by cable, was on hand. The child was carried carefully to the station emergency hospital; she was bright and smiling oblivious to her critical condition. Although her parents are Americans, the baby speaks only Japanese; she chattered with her mother in her babyish way.

Three hours rest in Chicago. Every precaution was taken to avoid excitement; newspapermen and photographers were not permitted to enter the hospital room. By telephone, the brain specialist in Boston was informed of the child's condition at the moment; everything would be in readiness for the delicate operation the following day when the party arrived in Boston.

Then the last leg of the dash started. And the following morning an ambulance was on hand at the Boston station to rush the party to the hospital. . . . the little group of Chicagoans who were privileged to witness this drama of life waited tensely and impatiently . . . one day; two days; three days . . . still no word of the outcome of the operation. At last came the message that the child had come through; the pluck of a mother and father and the skill of a great physician apparently had won. At this writing, the baby is improving.

A Pioneer's Thanksgiving.

When Thanksgiving comes round, the Lowden family always come together in the old homestead, where Grandfather and Grandmother Lowden still live. It is a large family, with many sons and daughters and grandsons and grandfathers, too; and it is widely scattered. Some of the members live in the cities; some in the country; but wherever they are when the great day comes, they go back to the old farm. And when they have eaten the big dinner, all except the nuts and raisins, some one of the children is sure to say, "Now, grandfather, the story!" And grandfather laughs and says, "Pooh! You have all heard that story till you know it by heart." But they protest. They have forgotten just how it happened, or they do not remember what it was the Indian did; and so at last grandfather says, "Well, if you must have it, here it is," and then he tells us this story:

"I was a boy then, twelve years old, and my sister Ellen was only fourteen. Father had come into the wilderness and started to clear this farm when I was three years old. He had built a log house and a log stable, and had cleared enough land to raise good crops of wheat, corn, potatoes and other vegetables. Neighbors had taken up land below us, and there was one family above, but the nearest house was a mile away. The log cabin that we lived in stood right where this house stands. Father put it here because of the fine spring of water.

"We had a good summmer that year, and the little hole under the house that we called a cellar was full of vegetables, and the stable packed with grain. From the beams of the kitchen hung hams and bacon from our own hogs. and strings of apples were drying. By Thanksgiving time everything was ready for the winter, even the great banking of dry leaves around the house to keep it warm.

"The day before Thanksgiving mother had been making soap in the great iron kettle hung over a fire outdoors. In the middle of the night we were all awakened by the barking of old Ben, our dog, and when I sat up in bed, I saw that the room was as light as day. For a moment I couldn't tell what the matter was, but it didn't take long to see that the house was on fire. One end was already burning fiercely, and the blaze was leaping higher every minute. It had started outside. Probably the embers of the soap-making fire had come to life in the night wind, and blown into the banking of leaves.

"Father had just time to snatch blankets from the bed and wrap them round my mother and my sister and me, and hurry us out into the cold night. It was useless to try to save the house. The only water was that in the spring, and there were only two or three pails to carry it in. We did what we could, but the fire soon drove us back, and in a little while the house was only a pile of glowing coals.

"We had been so busy watching and fighting the fire that we had given no thought to the stable which was behind us; but by and by I heard a crackling, and looked, and saw the roof all ablaze. Father and I got out the two horses and the cow, but the building we could not save. And so, on Thanksgiving morning, we stood, wrapped in blankets, with neither a roof over our heads nor any food. My mother and my sister were crying, but my father spoke only once, and said, 'The Lord will provide.'

"It was just getting light enough in the morning to see, when out of the woods behind the spot where the house had stood a figure came. I could not see what it was, except that it was a man, and that he had something on his back. He walked straight up to where we stood, and threw down in front of us the load he was carrying.

"Then I saw that it was old Sebattus, an Indian whom father found lying with a broken leg beside the trail a year or two before. He had brought him home and set the leg, and kept him till he was able to travel again. The load that he had thrown down was a hind quarter of venison and six partridges, and about a peck of parched corn in a little sack. While we all stared at him, the old man straightened up, and said, 'How! Sabbatus see fire and know, so he come. By and by come again.' Then he went back into the woods.

"That was the finest Thanksgiving that I ever remember, and the best dinner. We cut slices from the venison and broiled them over a fire built against the big rock out here in the yard. The partridges father rolled in soft clay, till the clay covered them all over, and then baked them in the ashes. When he raked them out and cracked open the balls of clay, each one contained a bird that was cooked as tender and juicy as any that your grandmother can cook in the oven of the range. The parched corn we ate for dessert.

"All those things I remember, but best of all I remember what father said when we sat down to eat. He told us what the day meant, and how thankful we ought to be. And then he made a prayer of thanksgiving that was the most beautiful that I ever heard.

"The Lord did provide, as father said He would. Neighbors came from far and near—some of them fifteen miles—and before the snow flew they had helped us put up another log cabin, and had filled it with provisions; and the next year father built this house."

A Good Reason.

Many years ago a man rode into a little village in England. He stopped at a blacksmith shop, and inquired, "Why can't a man get a drink of liquor in this town?" The blacksmith, without even looking up from his work, replied, "The reason is this: More than a hundred years ago a man named John Wesley preached in this town." What a tribute this blacksmith's reply paid to the powerful preaching and the righteous living of John Wesley. Wesley, perhaps, never dreamed that a century after his day men would be attributing the temperance strength of that community to the fact that he had preached there. Many a minister of the Gospel today may live powerfully a century or a millennium hence if the present race should endure so long. We cannot always tell how much good we are accomplishing. Our business is to live righteously and to work hard for Jesus Christ. He will take care of the results, and there will be communities to arise years in the future and call us blessed.

For the Southern Churchman.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Maude Forrest Mumma.

For Harvest so faithful,
For fruits of the tree;
For hearts that are grateful,
For visions of Thee.

For fruits of the garden,
For grains of the field;
For all of the blessings,
Thy storehouses yield.

For loving and giving,
For rest by the way;
For health and for living,
We thank Thee today!

The Missionary Engineer.

I rode into a Southern city on the fastest train on the Southern Railway, and went forward on the platform, when I had alighted, to take the grimy hand of the engineer who drove that locomotive. I looked into the manly face of a godly man who was driving that locomotive for the evangelization of the world just as really as any missionary abroad is working for that object. He was himself supporting a missionary in China, and following the course of that missionary's work with the keenest interest and with earnest prayer. As his wages increased, he was not adding to his expenditures for comforts and luxuries and selfish pleasures, but rejoicing in his privilege of investing even more largely in missionary effort. He was thus turning his money into souls saved for eternity. And the joy and satisfaction that were his in so doing deeply impressed me.—From "The King's Business".

Think.

Some of the greatest thinking has been done by those who cared little for riches—Pasteur, Edison, Jane Addams—and who shall say that theirs was not the richer life? Today the world knows the poetry of Shakespeare, the music of Wagner, the art of Rembrandt; but who knows even the names of the money barons of their day—or cares to know? If you want your name to live after you, you'll not give all your thought to money. But whether you want to make money, or write a book, or run a street car—or do anything else successfully—you'll do well to remember that in all the world there is no word more important than—"Think."—Edwin Baird.

Enthusiasm.

That is what Paul pleaded for in his letter to the Galatian Christians when he wrote them, "It is good to be zealously affected in a good thing."

Nearly everybody is zealous, or as we say, crazy about something. Enthusiasm is a peculiar human gift. You never met an enthusiastic monkey. You never in your life saw an enthusiastic cow. Enthusiasm is a hallmark of humanity.

You can go farther and say there is something divine in enthusiasm. I love to think of God as enthusiastic. The Old Testament speaks again and again of "the zeal of the Lord of hosts." And a New Testament writer says, "Our God is a consuming fire"—all ablaze with enthusiasm. Jesus pictures God as a father eagerly running across the fields of his estate to welcome back his wandering son, careless of his dignity in his enthusiastic joy over the boy's return.

There is something divine in enthusiasm for it was one of the characteristics of Christ. "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day," He cried, "for the night cometh when no man can work." His intensity so impressed His dicples that it reminded them of the Psalmist's saying, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." And on one occasion he seemed so afire with zeal that the members of his own household said, "He is beside himself." It made no difference whether he was speaking to an audience of one or preaching from a boat to a multitude that covered the seashore—always His spirit flamed with enthusiasm.
—Dr. Henry A. Porter.

AT CANDLETIME.

I thank Thee, Lord, at candletime
For happy hours of play;
I thank Thee for my pleasant home
Where I may spend each day.

I thank Thee for my garden, Lord,
For trees that I may climb;
I thank Thee for the cosy bed
That's mind at candletime.

Even Our Saviour Learned.

What was Christ doing in the carpenter's shop. Practicing! Though perfect we read that He learned obedience and grew in wisdom and in favor with God. Do not quarrel, therefore, with your lot in life. Do not complain of its never-ceasing cares, its petty environment, the vexations you have to stand, the small and sordid souls you have to live and work with. Above all, do not resent temptation; do not be perplexed because it seems to thicken around you more and more, and ceases neither for effort, nor for agony, nor prayer. That is your practice. That is the practice which God appoints you; and it is having its work in making you patient, and humble, and generous, and unselfish and kind, courteous. Do not grudge the hand that is molding the still too shapeless image within you. It is growing more beautiful, though you see it not, and every touch of temptation may add to its perfection.
—Henry Drummond.

A Dirge or a Song.

It is impossible for us to evade honorably some of the heavy burdens and disagreeable duties that life brings. There are also sorrows and disasters which it is quite impossible to evade, either honorably or otherwise. But we can always decide for ourselves what attitude we will take in meeting them. There are two possible courses. We can look upon ourselves as victims, allowing our hardships or our obligations to make us unhappy, and morose and bitter. To all such life loses it joy and zest, and even the blessings that are ours fail to awaken in us any spirit of happiness or gratitude. The other possible course is to determine that we shall be victors, meeting our responsibilities and bearing our burdens cheerfully and without complaint, and looking upon them as lessons which a loving God is teaching us. Which of these two courses we pursue will determine whether life shall be for us a dirge or a song. —Exchange.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL TO REMAIN IN NEW HAVEN.

That Berkeley Divinity School has definitely determined to remain in New Haven and contribute to the life of this community and of the Episcopal Church at large was indicated today by an announcement that the Board of Trustees at their annual meeting had elected to membership five new members. Among them were his Excellency, Wilbur L. Cross, governor of Connecticut; Dr. Charles E. Winslow, Professor of Public Health, Yale University and chairman of the Community Chest, and the Rev. Arthur F. McKenny, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church and president of the New Haven Federation of Churches. He was also elected secretary of the Board. It is understood that these three new members, all of whom are residents of New Haven, are in favor of keeping the school here.

Last spring considerable discussion centered about the possibility of moving the school at Cambridge, Mass., and such a move was authorized by act of the Connecticut legislature, but not without considerable opposition. Some members felt that it was unfortunate that an institution of higher learning, having something like $750,000 in assets, should be obliged to move to a neighboring State. Numerous protests arose from local organizations and from various denominational quarters. The Catholic Transcript of Hartford said that "outside of the Catholic Church, Berkley Divinity School has done more to spread and maintain the religion of Christ, as He founded it, than any other college or university in this Commonwealth", and looked upon its departure as having "the flavor of catastrophe". The alumni of the school voiced a vigorous protest, and many archdeaconries within the Diocese of Connecticut registered their desire that the school remain. The New Haven Federation of Church appealed to the Board of Trustees to find a way of keeping the school here by solving its financial problems.

Other trustees elected today were the Rev. Horac W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James' Church, New York City, and Mr. Frank Gulden, member of the Diocesan Council in the Diocese of Long Island, a delegate to the General Convention, trustee of the New York Boys' Club, and president of the Citizens' Savings Bank of New York City. The Rev. Theodore H. Evans, rector-elect of Trinity Episcopal Church, and Professor William Urban, of the department of Philosophy, Yale University, were elected overseers. The election of the new trustees and overseers make it certain that the school will remain permanently in New Haven, and continue its service both to this community and to the Episcopal Church.

The trustees estimate the needs of the school at $15,000 a year for the next three years. It is hoped that this amount will be forthcoming, and that before the end of three years the Middletown property formerly occupied by the school can be developed or sold so that a considerable income will be received from that quarter.

Dean Ladd, in his annual report, said that, contrary to his expectations, the discussion of the removal of the school had resulted in making it better known and in bringing it new friends. He had received many letters from Bishops and other churchmen throughout the country expressing their high estimate of the school and the desire that it should continue its work in Connecticut. The Dean said that there was a larger entering class than for many years, and more students from outside Connecticut in school than at any previous time in its history. The present students come from all the New England States except Vermont, and from New Jersey,, New York, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, West Virginia, Illinois, Colorado, Washington and California, and represent eighteen different educational institutions. He felt that there was every prospect that the school would from now on proceed "from strength to strength".

Among the trustees who assembled today were: Rt. Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, D. D., Bishop of Connecticut; the Rt. Rev. Chauncey Bunce Brewster, D. D., former Connecticut Diocesan; the Rev. John H. Fitzgerald, D. D., of the Diocese of Long Island, secretary to the House of Bishops; Dr. G. P. T. Sargent, rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City; Messrs. Franklin E. Parker, Jr., and Charles C. Burlingham, New York attorneys, the latter one-time president of the New York Bar Association and president of the Harvard Alumni Association; Mr. Charles T. Loram, chairman of the Board of Overseers, of the Department of Education, Yale University.

DR. REINHEIMER ELECTED BISHOP-COADJUTOR OF THE DIOCESE OF ROCHESTER.

The Rev. Bartel H. Reinheimer, D. D., executive secretary of the National Council's Field Department, was elected Bishop-Coadjutor of Rochester on November 19. His decision is not yet announced.

Born in Sandusky, Ohio, in 1889, Dr. Reinheimer is a graduate of Kenyon College and Bexley Hall. His training for his contribution to the work of the Church was also supplemented by summer courses at Ohio State University prior to his ordination to the priesthood in 1915. oFr three years he served as assistant and curate in various Ohio parishes. From 1918 to 1921 he was rector of Christ Church, Dayton, Ohio.

In 1919 Dr. Reinheimer was made executive of his Diocesan Committee and two years later, with the organization of the Bishop and Council of the Diocese of Southern Ohio, he was made its executive secretary. Under his direction the diocese, through the succeeding years of his administration, became one of the foremost organizations of the Church. He combined with his executive office the editorship of "The Church Messenger" of Southern Ohio, and organized the Young People's Society of Ohio. The Gambier Conference for Church Workers was organized and directed by him for three years.

In March, 1931, Dr. Reinheimer, who had never seen service in the Church officially outside of the state of Ohio, was elected to his present position in the National Council of the Church.

Since 1931 Dr. Reinheimer has had under his direction the development and prosecution of the field work in promotion of the Church's program, a nation-wide task which involves the direction of a staff of field secretaries operating at strategic points through the country, the supervision of a Speakers' Bureau, which sends into the field annually large numbers of speakers to spread information regarding the missionary program of the Church, the preparation of books, pamphlets, leaflets, etc., for further informing the Church membership, all of his efforts having a direct bearing upon the voluntary contributions through which the world work of the Church is carried on.

Dr. Reinheimer, in addition to his executive work has found time in the past few years to preach and deliver addresses in various parts of the country and to conduct courses at summer schools. He has written and published in connection with his work many books, pamphlets, etc., the more notable among them being "Rediscovery", "The Promise of Power", "Horizons" and "The Master Churchman".

MANY NEW BISHOPS IN THE ANGLICAN COMMUNION WITHIN THE YEAR.

Among the most recent are three missionary Bishops elected by the House of Bishops at Houston in November:

Dean Kroll, of Haiti, Bishop-elect of Liberia.

Bishop Reifsnider, Suffragan of North Tokyo, to succeed Bishop McKim as Bishop of that district.

Bishop Bartlett, of North Dakota, to become Bishop of Idaho. A successor will not be elected for North Dakota until next year. The narrow northern portion of Idaho has been added to the district of Spokane.

The Rev. Vedder Van Dyck, of Burlington, is Bishop-elect of Vermont.

Dean Dagwell, of Colorado, Bishop-elect of Oregon.

The Rev. Dr. Theodore R. Ludlow, of South Orange, N. J., Suffragan Bishop-elect of Newark.

Elsewhere among recent Anglican Bishops are a Chinese, an Indian, a Japanese.

The Right Rev. Shau-tsang Mok, assistant Bishop of Hongkong, completing his first year in January, 1936.

The Right Rev. Sisir Kumar Tarafdar, assistant Bishop of Calcutta, third Indian Bishop.

The Right Rev. Paul Shinji Sasaki, Bishop of Mid-Japan. When announcement of his election was made to the General Synod, "such a storm of applause burst forth as perhaps has never been known in the Japanese Church".

Another Chinese, the Right Rev. Lindel Tsen, formerly assistant in Honan, has become Bishop of that diocese.

Among new English missionary Bishops nine are taking up their difficult work in fields that by their mere mention indicate the worldwide sweep of the Anglican Communion: Lee, of Zuzuland; Mann, of South Japan; Howe-Browne, Bloemfontein, South Africa; Thompson, Iran (Persia); Elliott in Dornakal, South India, and West in Rangoon; Daly, Gambia and the Rio Pongas, a new West African diocese about four doors north of Liberia; Bullen, assistant for Egypt and Sudan, to work chiefly in the country of the Upper Nile, territory that borders on Ethiopia. Two among the new Bishops whose fields are less missionary in character are Mackenzi, of Brechin, in the Episcopal Church of Scotland, and Carrington, of Quebec, at whose consecration Bishop McElwain assisted.

HONORS CONFERRED ON DR. GAVIN.

The Rev. Dr. Frank S. B. Gavin, professor of Ecclesiastical History at the General Theological Seminary, has been awarded two honors by Rumanian authorities as the result of the visit to that country last summer as a member of the Archbishop of Canterbury's Commission to discuss the validity of Anglican orders with a commission of the Rumanian hierarchy.

The decorations which Dr. Gavin has received recently are the rank of Commander of the Order of the Star of Rumania, granted by King Carol; and the Patriarchal Cross, highest award of the Rumanian Orthodox Church, granted by His Beatitude Miron Cristea, patriarch of Rumania.

FROM BISHOP PERRY'S ARMISTICE DAY ADDRESS AT AMARILLO, TEXAS.

The Government and the Church have two distinct positions to take under the menace of war, and two distinct contributions to make to the cause of peace. These two cannot be wholly separated. Christian men in places of government have in their power to bear witness to the Gospel of Peace on earth. No less the conduct of affairs within the Church may manifest that spirit which animates true Christian statesmanship. A right understanding between these two groups will prevent hasty judgment on the one hand and needless strife on the other.

The Church in its corporate capacity has definite duties in the promotion of good will among men. In maintaining the principles of righteousness and justice the cause of peace is served. Peace is not the ultimate ideal to which the Christian bends his efforts; rather is it the condition which results from obedience to God's law.

When, then, as on Armistice Day, the Christian world is found on its knees in prayer, let it seek the rule of righteousness and truth. To men of that kind, to men of good will, the blessing of peace is given.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D. Bishop.

Acolyte Guilds Meet.

On All Saints' Day, the semi-annual meeting of Acolytes, was held in St. John's Church, Decatur, with an attendance of eighty boys and young men. A business meeting was held at 5 P. M., a dinner at 6 and solemn Evensong at 7:30. The rector, the Rev. W. W. Daup, was the officiant, and the Rev. J. McNeal Wheatley, rector of Trinity Church, Fort Wayne, Indiana, was the guest speaker.

St. John's Church Reviews Eighty Years' History—Candles Light Old Cross.

Eighty candles lighted the old Cross of St. John's Church, which was the first Cross on a public building in Decatur, in the eightieth anniversary celebration of the church, Friday night, November 15. Eight tableaux, depicting the eighty years of history of the church, were witnessed by a crowd which filled the parish house. The Cross scene was given between two of the tableaux. The mayor of Decatur, Harry E. Barber, and his friend, Freeman Wilmeth, sang, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory", which was followed by a splendid address by the mayor.

The series of tableaux began with the reproduction of the first Episcopal service held in Decatur, which was in the old Masonic Hall in 1855. One of the particularly interesting scenes shown was the first children's public Christmas Tree in Decatur, which was in 1858 in St. John's Church. Another interesting scene was the burning of the mortgage on the present new building in 1912.

Costumes were of unusual interest and beauty, being typical of the time represented. The Christmas Tree of 1858 was hung with pop-corn strings, cranberries and cookies, and the children who gathered around it wore pantalettes and poke bonnets.

The walls of the parish house were lined with old-fashioned quilt and a Colonial Tea was served. A junior group of young people, under the direction of Mrs. W. W. Daup, wife of the rector, sponsored the program. This lively group of young folks have set out to equip the rector's office with mimeograph, addressograph, typewriter, etc. Thus far a new mimeograph has been purchased. These same young folks publish a weekly paper known as "The Episcopanion" (a real new word from Episcopal and companionship) for the Church School.

Diocesan Auxiliary President Honored by Tea in St. John's Rectory.

Mrs. W. W. Daup, assisted by St. John's Guild Auxiliary, gave a tea at the rectory, November 20, to honor Mrs. James Weart and Sister Raphaelle, of Springfield. Mrs. Weart is diocesan Auxiliary president, and Sister Raphaelle has charge of the Orphanage of the Holy Child. Fifty-two guests were present, and all enjoyed the inspirational talk by Mrs. Weart.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop.

Grace Church, Pomeroy.

The sixtieth anniversary of the organization of the women of the parish to work for domestic and foreign missionaries will be celebrated next February.

The Women's Auxiliary was originally organized on February 4, 1876, under the name of the Woman's Missionary Association.

The church in Pomeroy was organized March 21, 1842, by ten men, all of whom had come with their families from Vermont and Massachusetts. The settlement was named after one of these men.

Valentin B. Horton was elected senior warden, James Crary was junior warden, and E. Tracy Howe was secretary. The vestrymen were C. R. Pomeroy, John Martin, Edward Saul, Martin Heckard, Sani Bartlett, John Behan and John Brown.

A frame church was built on a lot donated by Mr. Horton on Naylors Avenue, now known as Spring Avenue. Rev. Goodwin was the first rector. Services were held in the frame building, which is still standing, for a number of years. Rev. Clotworthy succeeded Rev. Goodwin, and the third rector was Rev. Thomas Dooley.

Plan New Church.

At a vestry meeting in May, 1865, it was decided to build a new church, to be named the Grace Church, which was also the name of the first church. The C. R. Pomeroy family gave a lot on East Main Street for the building, and Mr. Tinsley, an Englishman, came from Cincinnati to draw the plans.

Mr. V. B. Horton was the largest contributor of money, material and labor. Mr. S. W. Pomeroy had the spire built as a memorial to his son, Henry. Miss Caroline Pomeroy, sister of Mrs. V. B. Horton, donated the bell. She was an invalid, and it is recorded that she was taken in her wheel chair to hear the bell rung the first time. Later, the pipe organ was given by Mrs. G. W. Plantz, and the present rectory was built by Judge P. B. Stanbery in memory of his daughter, Cecelia.

ATLANTA.

Rt. Rev. Henry J. Mikell, D. D., Bishop

The Bishop Attended the President's Thanksgiving Dinner.

Bishop H. J. Mikell was invited to give the prayer of thanks at the presidential dinner given Thanksgiving Day at Georgia Hall, Warm Springs, Ga., for the "polio" patients, as they call themselves, and was the guest of President and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt at the "Little White House".

The president was in the congregation on Sunday evening, November 24, when the Bishop preached at Warm Springs. Bishop Mikell, accompanied by the Rev. J. D. C. Wilson, annually visits the Church of Mt. Zion in Talbotton, every November, and then holds a service at Warm Springs for the patients living there.

Historic Old St. Philip's, Atlanta, Turned Over to Diocese.

Bishop H. J. Mikell read the deconsecration service on October 31 at historic Old St. Philip's, corner of Hunter and Washington Streets, and the building was turned over to the wreckers. All the memorials have been removed to the new Pro-Cathedral, corner of Andrews Drive and Peachtree Road.

The cornerstone was opened by the Bishop in the presence of a large gathering on November 15. Sealed in the box were papers dated 1872, a fortune in confederate money and other items of historic interest to a city just recovering from the dark days of the War Between the States.

The congregation, organized in 1846 when Atlanta was known as Marthsville, is the oldest in Atlanta. The first building was completed in 1847, and served until 1881, when the red brick Gothic Church was completed. This was abandoned in 1933, when the parish moved from the downtown district to the residential section on the north side.

Joint Thanksgiving Service.

The annual joint Thanksgiving service of all the patriotic societies of New York was held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine Sunday, November 24, at 4:0 P. M. The guest preacher at the service was the Rev. Edgar F. Romig, D. D., minister of the West End Collegiate Church. Thirty societies participated in the service.

Memorial Chapel Dedicated.

The memorial chapel at St. Paul's Church, Washington Avenue and St. Paul's Place, Bronx, was dedicated Sunday evening, November 24, by the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of N. Y., in honor of the Rev. Homer Francis Taylor and his wife, Lillian Newcomb Taylor. Dr. Taylor was the former rector of the parish.

Bishop Rowe's Fortieth Anniversary to Be Celebrated at St. George's.

Bishop Rowe of Alaska was consecrated in St. George's Church on November 30, 1895. On Saturday, November 30, 1935, Bishop Rowe will return to St. George's Church to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of his consecration. Bishop Rowe will celebratet he Holy Communion at 9:00 A. M. His friends are being invited to be present for that service.

On Sunday morning, November 24, the Rev. W. Russell Bowie, D. D., rector of Grace Church, began a series of sermons commemorating the four hundredth anniversary of the printing of the first translation of the Bible in the English tongue. Dr. Bowie's sermon on Sunday was "The Bible as the Book of Life". On the four succeeding Sundays his sermons will deal with Great Souls of the Bible.

Mission at Old Church.

The Rev. Henry E. Batcheller, one of the missioners recommended by the National Commission on Evangelism, held a mission in Immanuel Church, Old Church, Virginia, November 10-15. His sermons and answers to questions drew large congregations in spite of somewhat disagreeable weather. Each day there was a meditation (except the last day when there was a celebration of the Holy Communion), and an evening service. The young people were particularly interested in the services. The whole community was deeply impressed by his messages and the devotional services.

Annual Diocesan Sunday School Institute.

Over five hundred people crowded into the parish hall of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, recently for the annual Sunday School Institute, held under the direction of the Department of Religious Education, the Rev. William Moody chairman. Dr. Arthur M. Sherman was the principal speaker. The general theme was the Forward Movement. It was decided to use the term Church School Institute instead of Sunday School Institute hereafter.

Shriners Make Pilgrimage to Cathedral.

On Sunday, November 10, a delegation of possibly four hundred Shriners made a pilgrimage to the Washington Cathedral on Mount St. Alban, coming from Philadelphia. They were inspired by the majesty of the great religious shrine in the nation's capital. This is just one of hundreds of such pilgrimages conducted during the year, when tens of thousands of people from many parts of the world visit the Cathedral.

Services Held at Tomb of President Wilson.

On the afternoon of Armistice Day brief but impressive memorial services were held at the tomb of Woodrow Wilson in the Cathedral, under auspices of several veterans' organizations. Several addresses were made, appropriate to the occasion.

Pacifists Launch Campaign for $1,000,000.

A Pacifists' campaign to raise $1,000,000 has been launched, with headquarters in Washington, for the purpose of promoting pacifism, in the light of extraordinary efforts for defense and the great expenditure of public funds for army and navy. One objective, it is understood, is to outlaw the ROTC, and another the slashing of the $500,000,000 Congressional fund for increase of the U. S. Navy.

The thirty-third anniversary of the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, D. D., as rector of St. Thomas Church, Washington, the church of President Roosevelt and his family, was celebrated with fitting ceremonies recently, and Dr. Smith was highly praised for the work done during his pastorate. T. F. O.

Convocation Deeply Moved by Story of Work Among the Criminal and Insane.

Rev. N. G. Vivian, chaplain of the State institutions and rector of St. David's, Meshanticut, aroused the Providence Convocation, held recently at All Saints' Church, Providence, so effectively that the latest statement sent out from Diocesan headquarters for the promotion of the Every Member Canvass includes a promise of funds for work among these institutions, providing the diocese raises the twelve per cent increase sought by the Council. Father Vivian, who has tried to do the work of a staff of clergymen for half a dozen institutions at Howard, and shepherd his own little flock, has shamed his hearers, who were deeply moved by his story of what has been accomplished among the criminal and insane under his care.

The ministrations of the Church have been so effective that the State has, at Howard, turned over all chaplain's pastoral work, except that assumed by the Roman Catholics and the Baptists, to the Episcopal Church. At the Wallum Lake Sanatorium for the Tubercular, it has assigned to our chaplain, the Rev. Herbert J. Dowling, rector of Calvary Church, Pascoag, all pastoral work among the non-Romans.

Another objective of the Every Member Canvass is the reduction of mortgages on property of diocesan missions. There are several heavy liens on buildings of this class. If they can be removed, it is the purpose of the diocese to apply the funds saved to missionary work at home.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. T. Helfenstein, D. D., Bishop

The Consecration of St. Paul's Chapel.

On the evening of November 3 the Bishop of Maryland consecrated St. Paul's Chapel on Washington Boulevard, Baltimore, the Rev. Frank Hay Staples, vicar in charge. There was a large congregation, which included six members of the vestry of St. Paul's Parish and eighteen men of the council of the chapel. The Rev. Dr. Arthur B. Kinsolving, rector of the parish, preached the consecration sermon, tracing the development of the work from small beginnings in 1891 in a different section of the city. In July, 1907, the Henshaw Memorial Church was merged with St. Paul's Guild House, the vestry of St. Paul's purchased a lot adjacent, and built a guild house and residence for the vicar in charge at a cost of $70,000. Here, under the leadership of Mr. Staples and his devoted flock, the work grew apace. In November, 1932, the chapel and organ were destroyed by fire, and the adjacent Guild House injured. Out of the insurance held by the vestry of St. Paul's all damage was repaired, and a large debt paid off. The consecration of this beautiful chapel is a rich reward for the fostering care given through the years by the mother parish, and fitly crowns the labors of Mr. Staples, who has served as priest in charge for thirty three years. The chapel has now nearly 700 communicants, a Church School of 600, a Men's Club of 250, and more than thirty organizations meet in the Guild House.

Peaceful Settlement in Grace and St. Peter's Church, Baltimore.

Owing to the continued disagreement between the vestry and a large number of the members of Grace and St. Peter's Church, which was causing open scandal and was disrupting the congregation, the vestry, for the sake of peace and harmony, most graciously authorized the Bishop to call a meeting of the congregation, over which he was to preside, and at which it was to be decided whether they represented the congregation or not in their administration.

The Bishop clearly stated in his address that this meeting was not held according to provisions of the Canons or of the Vestry Act, but was simply the last resort to stop the chism and bring back peace and harmony.

The vote was simply to express the approval of the administration or voice a desire for a change. The vote was adverse to the vestry and according to the agreement, the Bishop is to nominate new members of the vestry, two by two, to take the place of the retiring members. These men are to be chosen from the entire congregation without regard to factional divisions, with a single purpose to provide a vestry which will carry on the work until the annual Easter election. A definite promise was given by all concerned that such a vestry will be loyally supported by the congregation.

N. B. No such words as "ejectment" or "dismissal" were used.

N. Evelyn Parsons.

Repairs Completed on the Cathedral.

The cross over the middle doorway of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, fell one night during August and investigation disclosed the need for repairs on the spire and tower. These repairs have just been completed. The women of the Cathedral have remodeled the kitchen of the Cathedral House and have purchased additional kitchen and dining room equipment.

Christ Church, Bowling Green, Active in Student Work.

The vestry of Christ Church, Bowling Green, has been very active. It has assisted the church in its work among the students of the Western Teachers' College and the Business University by subsidizing the suppers of the Young People's Service League so that each member has to pay only ten cents for his Sunday night supper. The Young People's Service League at Christ Church is made up largely of students of the two colleges. It has also given money for an entirely new set of cassocks for the choir.

Large Confirmation Class Presented.

Grace Church, Paducah, presented a fine class of twenty-five to the Bishop for confirmation when he visited it on October 20. Many offerings were added to the endowment fund of the parish on the Sunday after All Saints' Day.

Second Confirmation at St. Thomas', Louisville.

Confirmation will be held for the second time this year at St. Thomas' Church, Louisville, on Advent Sunday. On Friday, November 22, from 10 A. M. to 3 P. M. St. Thomas' remained open for prayer and meditation as preparation for the Advent season.

A Spirit of Unity.

When the Bishop visited Trinity Mission at Russellville on Sunday night, October 13, all the other churches in town cosed their doors and went to hear him. There was such a crowd that chairs were borrowed from the Presbyterian Church across the street.

The Diocese's Goal Another Church Nearer.

When the new building of St. Thomas' Mission, Lyndon, was consecrated by the Bishop on Sunday, November 3, there was such a crowd that people stood at the windows and in the doorway. This is the second of the diocese's goal of "a hundred new churches in the next hundred years".

Date of Annual Convention.

The one hundred and eighth annual convention of the Diocese of Kentucky will be held beginning January 23 at Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, at which time the election of the Bishop for the diocese is to be held.

Armistice Service at National Shrine.

The Rev. Don Frank Fenn, D. D., rector of St. Michael and All Angels Church, Baltimore, preached to a large congregation in the National Shrine of the Prince of Peace, Gettysburg, at a special Armistice Day Service, November 10. The service was attended by the Albert J. Lentz Post of the American Legion, and its Woman's Auxiliary. Choral Evensong was sung by the Ven. A. A. Hughes, vicar, assisted by the Rev. T. W. Null, G. N. Waters and A. L. Atkinson.

Miss Ward Set Apart as Deaconess.

Miss Mary Frances Ward, parish secretary and social worker for several years at Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa., was set apart as a Deaconess by the Rt. Rev. Wyatt Brown, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg, in the Chapel of the Church Training and Deaconess House, Philadelphia, on All Saints' Day. The deaconess was presented by the Very Rev. Hiram R. Bennett, Dean of St. John's Cathedral, Wilmington, Delaware, who also preached the sermon. Bishop Brown was assisted by Bishop Taitt, the Rev. E. M. Jefferys, D. D., former chaplain of the deaconess school, and the Rev. B. Janney Rudderow, present chaplain. Deaconess Ward will continue on the staff of Christ Church, Williamsport.

Personal Notes

The Rev. John Gass, D. D., for ten years rector of St. John's Church, Charleston, West Virginia, was instituted by Bishop Manning, Sunday morning, November 10, as rector of the Church of the Incarnation, New York City. Dr. Gass succeeds the late Rev. H. Percy Silver, D. D. The new rector is forty-five years of age and was a deputy from the Diocese of West Virginia to the General Convention in 1925, 1928 and 1931. He was a member of the West Virginia Unemployment Relief Administration in 1932 and 1933, and is a director of the Family Welfare Association of America. He is a Trustee of the University of the South.

The Rev. Francis Hopkinson Craighill, Jr., rector of Grace Church, Camden, S. C., has accepted a call from St. Bartholomew's Church, New York City, to become senior curate. Mr. Craighill will succeed Mr. Piper, who is leaving to become rector of Christ Church, Williamsport, Pa.

Canon W. S. Turner, rector of Our Saviour, Atlanta, will attend the College of Preachers in Washington at the National Cathedral, December 9-13, for a series of conferences to be led by the Most Rev. and Rt. Hon. William Temple, D. D., Archbishop of York, and Primate of England. Following this, Canon Turner will assume his new duties as rector of St. Paul's Church, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. William H. Jepson, rector of St. Luke's Church, Bridgeport, Conn., was unanimously chosen Archdeacon of Fairfield, Conn.

The Rev. Albert L. Whittaker, D. D., formerly of St. Mary's and St. Jude's Church, Northeast Harbor, Maine, has become rector of St. Paul's Church, Southampton, Conn.

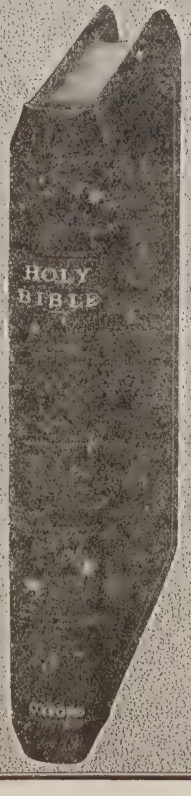
The Rev. Theodore H. Evans, rector of Christ Church, Tuscaloosa, Ala., has been called to Trinity Church, New Haven, Conn., to succeed the Rev. Charles O. Scoville, D. D.

The Rev. J. T. Knight, formerly of the Associated Missions, York, Nebraska, has been appointed locum tenens of St. Paul's, Omaha.

Ordination.

The Rev. Charles Liles was ordered deacon at St. Mary's Church, Bolton, Miss., recently. The Rev. Mr. Liles was a member of St. Luke's Church, Brandon, which is part of the Bolton Field. The rector of the field made the ordination a field affair. Bolton is in the centre of the field, so the service was held there. Over 300 attended the service. Every place in the field had a delegation. The Rev. Val. H. Sessions, D. D., preached the sermon and presented the candidate; the Rt. Rev. Wm. Mercer Green, D. D., ordained the candidate, and said the Litany.

Deaths.



MRS. J. H. W. BLAKE.

Mary Giddings Blake died at her home in Washington on November 17, in her ninetieth year. She was the widow of the Rev. James H. W. Blake. Her husband had been rector of Trinity Church, Tiffin, Ohio; St. John's Church, La Fayette, Ind.; St. Paul's Church, Akron, Ohio; Christ Church, Georgetown, D. C., and rector emeritus of Christ Church from 1926 until his death in 1928.

Mrs. Blake was a native of Frederick County, Maryland.

DEATHS

IN MEMORIAM.

EMILY SWEPSON WINGFIELD RIDDICK, June the ninth, passed into the life eternal, prepared for those who love Him.

During her life in Suffolk she was a faithful and interested member of the Randolph Society of St. Paul's Church.

Possessing a distinct personality, with a charm all her own, she brought to the meetings a ready wit and a vivacity which made many a meeting bright with fun and laughter.

One of her chief pleasures was dispensing hospitality. She was never happier than when surrounded, in her own home, by her friends, especially the young people.

Full of sentiment for the things of the heart and spirit gave her always a love of life, and a keen zest for living. She never grew old, as we count the years of our earthly sojourn.

Her generous disposition and sympathy for those in sickness and sorrow carried her far beyond the limits of her home, and she will be remembered with affection throughout the county as well as in Suffolk.

We sorrow with her loved ones, and express to them sincerest sympathy in this hour of loneliness: but we are ever mindful that she has been called to the higher life of greater opportunties in service for the Master, and can rejoice with them for her.

"The strife is o'er the battle done,
The victory of life is won,
The song of triumph has begun. Alleluia."

KATHERINE B. H. PRETLOW,
JANET A. DARDEN,
ELISE U. HOLLADAY,

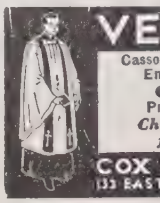
HARVEY JOHN FRENCH.

Mr. Harvey John French, 73, for more than six decades a church singer, died of a heart ailment, in his home in Albany, N. Y., November 4. At the age of ten, Mr. French was boy soprano soloist at All Saints' Pro-Cathedral, Albany. Later, he was bass soloist at Trinity Church in the same city. For a number of years, he sang in the choir of Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He was bass soloist at St. Andrew's Memorial Church, Yonkers, N. Y., and later, for fifteen years sang in the Chapel of the Intercession, Trinity Parish, New York City. For several years past, he had been singing in Albany churches. Surviving Mr. French are his widow, Mrs. Mary W. Nichols French; two sons, Canon Clifford W. French of Harrisburg, Pa., and Harvey J. French, Jr.

MRS. WILLIAM PRESSEY.



The Diocese of Rhode Island has been saddened by the death of Katherine Benfield Pressey, wife of the Rev. William Pressey, secretary of the diocese, and rector emeritus of St. John's Chapel, Ashton, R. I. Mrs. Pressey was born in London, England, sixty-nine years ago. As a child of six she came with her parents to Cleveland, Ohio, and there in 1893 she married Mr. Pressey, a young priest who in September of that year established her in the rectory of St. John's Chapel, Ashton, where she remained during his long and notable rectorship of forty-one years. Nine months ago she and her husband had moved to Providence, but she never quite adjusted herself to the strange life away from a rambling rectory, playing hostess to a wide variety of groups, organizations and individuals.

Mrs. Pressey organized the first chapter of The King's Daughters in Ashton. She started the first Girls' Friendly Society. She established the Altar Guild. All three are still active. She was also a member of the Pawtucket Woman's Club, as well as the Clerica.

The funeral was held in the Church of the Epiphany, Providence, on Tuesday, November 19, attended by many of the clergy. The Rt. Rev. G. G. Bennett, D. D., auxiliary bishop of Rhode Island, officiated.

THE HOUSTON MESSAGE OF THE HOUSE OF BISHOPS ON THE EVERY MEMBER CANVASS

Recently the Field Department presented a statement through advertisements in the Church weeklies which may be summarized as follows:

The sum of the Objectives which the dioceses have assumed for the support of the 1936 General Church Budget is less than the amount needed.

If these Objectives are reached in the Canvass and subsequently paid in full, the National Council, meeting on February 11th next will lack approximately $150,000 of the amount needed to maintain the general work of the Church at the figure of the Emergency Schedule.

If this situation remains unchanged at the time of the Council meeting it will be necessary, because of the orders of General Convention, to make a further cut in the Church's general work.

Facing this situation, the House of Bishops, meeting at Houston, adopted a statement which concluded as follows:

"Brethren, this will be nothing short of a debacle, and that in the face of improvement in the financial condition of our people generally. The effect will be demoralizing to our people and disastrous to the work. Therefore, be it > RESOLVED: That it is the sense of this House that every Bishop be requested to send to each of his clergy a Pastoral letter, to be read to his congregations, setting forth these facts and calling upon them, with all the emphasis possible, to increase their pledges before January 1st in order that at least the Emergency Schedule may be maintained and the influence of the Church preserved in this present civilization."

An increase of 11 per cent in the pledges for 1936 will raise the Budget and work of the general Church above the stand-still basis it occupies at present.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Heaven is a perfected sight."

God's power never breaks—and prayer lays hold of God's power.

In times of sorrow or of waiting, it is well to put our hands to some active work.

The Church has no other purpose in existence, no other end to serve save the great end of giving the Gospel to the world.—Selected.

Our prayers should be that we may increasingly think His thoughts, share His purposes and know His control.

Love, Brotherhood, Sacrifice—these are the elements which must show the way to a solution of the national and international problems of the present.

—Bishop Rogers.

As a man, let all fear and trembling be yours. As a child of God, let all confidence and trust be yours. Turn both your confidence and your fears into prayer.

—Alex McLaren.

I have a feeling that God will regard more leniently my sins of commission than He will those of omission. In the case of the former I can at least plead some sudden, unexpected and overwhelming temptation. But when He says: "Inasmuch as ye did it not" how can I excuse my cold-blooded refusal to see another's woe.

—Dr. E. C. McCants.

The churches must ceaselessly proclaim that out of the heart are the issues of life. True religion must stand always not only against exploitation but against the very desire to exploit. The Christian religion demands now and must always demand that both human hearts and human institutions be controlled and judged by that mind which was in Christ Jesus.

We may search long to find where God is, but we shall find Him in those who keep the words of Christ. For the Lord Christ saith, "If any man love me, he will keep my words; and we will make our abode with him."

—Martin Luther.

He understands, I know—outside His love,
Though all unworthy, still I cannot move.
I know He understands—just now, as then—
I know—for once He walked on earth with men.

—A. C. Cattall.

"One word from Thee, my Lord, one smile, one look,
And I could face the cold, rough world again;
And with that treasure in my heart could brook
The wrath of devils and the scorn of men."

God may put His faithful ones upon a long and painful apprenticeship, during which they learn much and receive little—food only, and "that in a measure"—often the bread and water of affliction. Yet at the last he pays; pays them into their hearts, pays them into their hands also.

—Dora Greenwell.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

News From the Front.

Mr. Editor:

For years I have been a constant follower of your magazine and have always found it a source of inspiration as well as a means of personal contact with our Church on all fronts.

I have been particularly interested in your page, "News From the Front," which, I believe, is edited now by a minister of my own city. I am frank in saying that I never before hesitated at that page until it was taken over by the Rev. Mr. Gasque and was put by him into an interesting, readable form.

Please pass on to him my compliments, and, meanwhile, I shall look him up here and do the same.

E. M. Beavers.

Other St. Barnabas' Guilds in the South Heard From.

Mr. Editor:

Referring to the letter which appeared on page four of the November 23 issue of the Southern Churchman, under the caption, "St Barnabas Guild", we note that your correspondent says that "as far as can be ascertained" the Branch of the Guild of St. Barnabas organized at St. James' Church, Richmond, "is the only one in the South". We have heard that some Virginians think of West Virginia as "the West", and it may be that your correspondent would consider Tennessee as "the Far West"; but we are writing to say that "Memphis on the Mississippi", or "Memphis Down in Dixie", as one of our radio announcers speaks of us, rejoices in a Branch of the Guild of St. Barnabas, and the Living Church Annual (1935, Pp. 123 ff.) lists Branches in a half dozen cities, usually thought of as in the South—including Birmingham, Dallas, Ashland, Ky., Lexington, Ky., and New Orleans. Our Branch in Memphis is composed principally of Student Nurses and is sponsored by Doctor's wives. At our Annual Florence Nightingale Memorial Service in May this year, a service sponsored by the Guild, about 500 Student Nurses were present in uniform, representing the five Schools of Nursing in the city. It may be of interest to know that our Branch if affiliated with the other Episcopal Student Groups of the city and twice each year there are occasions which bring the various Student Groups together. We trust that your Correspondent will understand that we have called attention to these other Branches of the Guild of St. Barnabas more particularly for the honor of the Guild, and especially the honor of the Guild in the South. If her otherwise splendid letter describing the purpose of the Guild of St. Barnabas might be widely read, and we trust that was, her letter should go far toward arousing a much wider interest in the Guild not only in the South but in the nation at large.

Wm. D. Bratton,
Chaplain, Memphis Branch,

The Church and Loyalty.

Dr. Ralph Sockman, a prominent Protestant minister of New York, said some rather wise things in a recent sermon. He is concerned with the lack of loyalty which church people in New York exhibit. To him the underlying cause is found in the attitude that the Church as a whole has attempted to imitate the commercial interests and simply aims to please.

We are rather inclined to agree with Dr. Sockman. Loyalty to a parish church is a thin thing with most people—even those who consider themselves good churchmen. Taught that the whole world is an amusing place and that the chief end of man is to amuse himself, it is only natural that the attitude towards the Church should be the same. When amusement ceases, either quit the Church altogether, or go down the street to another place, where perhaps some better crooner of comforting or amusing phrases holds forth.

The sad part is that the Church actually has the most challenging message of any agency working with human beings. The black shirts of Italy could not ask for greater sacrifice than the religion of Jesus Christ. And yet men think of such historic episodes as the great adventures, and the Church as something that must entertain.

In the entertainment field we are indeed awkward. Any second-class manager of a moving picture house knows more about entertainment than the most popular minister. Words must be cleverly chosen, if they are to constantly entertain. And in the restlessness of American life today, with the temptation to constantly be on the move to some other place, the Church which presents no real challenge finds its members floating from one pulpit to another until many of the members become lost in obscurity and finally appear on the parish register as "removed and unknown".

Perhaps the fault lies in our sense of worship. We think of worship as something that must be done for us. We pay a minister to worship and arrange services of worship. We forget that real worship is that which we must do ourselves. We have long had ugly churches—particularly we, who pride ourselves in the Protestant tradition. There is a change for the better, but much of the change is concerned only with adding ritual thoughtlessly and without knowing much about its real meaning—just another method of entertainment, or "pleasing the public".

The Forward Movement is aimed at just such attitudes. A deeper discipleship is needed to make men have a deeper loyalty. Sermons must be concerned with people and people's sins if they are to stir the religious depths of mankind. The easy method of compromise that has been too evident in the easy admittance to membership in our churches must be replaced by the challenge that one must live up to the words of Our Saviour to really be His follower.

Of course, there is the opposite extreme. Men have tried to damn all humanity in religion. But we wonder if that is any worse than the motto in the Church of "The Public be Pleased".

A Great Anniversary.

This week, December thirteenth, we should be celebrating the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Phillips Brooks. Possibly because of the elaborate plans which have been carried out in remembrance of the hundredth anniversary of Mark Twain, we have neglected this great man, who in his way was as great as the author of "Huckleberry Finn".

To the older members of the Church who remember the great ministry of Brooks, the fact that he would be one hundred years old comes as something of a shock. It seems only yesterday that his great voice was uttering words of prophecy from the pulpit of Trinity Church, Boston. It is a tribute to his memory that men in our Church still speak of a brilliant preacher as a "second Phillip Brooks". So far his real successor has not been discovered.

Brooks had rivals in his day. He had enemies who were wont to say that he was unorthodox. To younger men this is laughable as it is to anyone who has read his sermons. They display a great evangelical fervor that he undoubtedly received from his early rector and bishop and which was augmented by the training of the Seminary in Virginia. Of course, again to younger men, much that we read in his sermons is familiar, but we forget that it was inspirational and unusual in his own day. The only reason it is familiar today is because it was so penetrating that preachers ever since have been using his thoughts.

The late biographer, Gamaliel Bradford, could not find Brooks a congenial subject for a book. He was at a loss to understand him and confessed that his letters and sermons left him uninspired. He wondered if something was the matter with himself, for Brooks had thrilled not only Boston and Massachusetts, but the whole of America. Possibly Bradford, the pessimistic genius that he was, lived his greatest life after Phillips Brooks had paved the way for that which was common in later years. And then Brooks belonged to his time and his time was one when pious phraseology in letters and even sermons was the style. The won-

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Taking Life for Crime.

Richmond Times-Dispatch.

The impression prevails widely that fear of the death penalty is a great deterrent to criminals, and that if that fear were removed, serious crimes would increase rapidly. But the homicide figures in States which do not have capital punishment are much better, on the whole, than in those which do have capital punishment.

Eight of the forty-eight States have laws which fix life imprisonment as the maximum penalty for any crime, however heinous. These are Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Dakota and Wisconsin. The highest homicide rate in any of them for the year 1933, the latest for which complete figures are available, is the rate in Kansas, which is 8.0, while the others range between Wisconsin's 1.1 and Michigan's 3.3 per 100,000.

The lowest murder rate in any Southern State for the same year was that for South Carolina, 8.0, which is precisely the highest rate among the eight States which do not have capital punishment. The other Southern States all have much higher rates than South Carolina, ranging upward to Alabama's 34.5. Virginia's 1933 rate was 16.3.

It will doubtless be argued that the large Negro population is chiefly responsible for the high incidence of murder in Dixie. That is certainly an important factor in the situation, but on the other hand, the white homicide rate in the South is considerably higher than it is in the rest of the country.

Even if we leave the South entirely out of account, it becomes apparent that the eight States without capital punishment (none of which is in the South), have much lower murder rates than the other non-Southern States. The average for the eight States without capital punishment is 2.7 per 100,000, while that for the twenty-eight with capital punishment is 5.9.

It cannot be argued that the States without capital punishment are largely rural, for Rhode Island, the most thickly populated State in America, is on the list, and its murder rate is 1.7. And even if all eight were rural, that would not necessarily mean anything, since Nevada has a rate of 19.9 and Arizona has one of 19.8.

The inescapable conclusion, then, is that capital punishment is not a deterrent to crime. Equally inescapable, we think, is the conclusion that capital punishment ought therefore to be abolished. The only excuse for it in the first place was that it was presumed to reduce the number of homicides. Since it clearly does not reduce them, Virginia should follow the example of more enlightened Commonwealths and provide that life imprisonment shall be the maximum penalty imposed in any of her courts. In most cases those who go to the electric chair in Virginia are guilty, but in rare cases the lives of innocent men are taken.

Let's abolish this ancient barbarity, the putting to death of human beings for crime, and confine our worst criminals for the duration of their lives. Then if after-discovered evidence demonstrates the innocence of any of them, he can be set free, and the State will not have on its head the blood of an innocent man.

Parochial Finance.

Church of England Newspaper, November 15, 1935.

Gift Days Instead of Bazaars.

We always welcome reports from parishes to the effect that sound principles of church finance are so far permeating the community that bazaars and sales of work have been abandoned for a gift day or other schemes of direct giving. We know all that can be said for bazaars from the social point of view, but we have long contended that the principle is wrong so far as the Church is concerned.

We, therefore, congratulate the Vicar of West Ham and his people upon their decision this year to have a gift day instead of the customary sale. The Vicar, the Rev. Arthur Wallace, asked for £300, as last year the bazaar produced £334 less £21 expenses. The gift day which has just been observed produced £365 less £5 expenses, and the hard work, heart-burnings and competition have been avoided.

It is noteworthy that the Vicar and members of the staff are associated with the Oxford Group, and during the past twelve months the spiritual temperature of the parish has been steadily rising.

In a Colliery Parish.

The rector of a colliery parish also informs us that for the second year in succession the usual sale of work was abandoned for a Gift Day. Over £100 has been freely given by 300 individuals, although the parish is poor.

Euthanasia.

The Guardian, November 1, 1935.

The question whether it is right to put human beings who are suffering hopeless and irremediable pain out of their misery has suddenly achieved fresh prominence through a recent trial. The judge summed up against the prisoner, because the law must be upheld; he indicated that if an appeal for mercy was to be made it must be made in another quarter than the law court. In spite of this lead the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. Subsequent discussion has encouraged those who feel strongly that there are instances when euthanasia is a moral duty to agitate for a change in the law. It cannot be denied that sometimes charity both to the sufferer and to all who love him or her would seem to demand a merciful release. But the problem is terribly complicated, and it is always dangerous to allow sentiment to weigh too heavily in the framing of the law. The proposals put forward are based on the supposition that the consent of the patient must always be obtained, if life is to be deliberately ended by human action. The question instantly arises: How often will it be possible, when there is incapacitating suffering, to be sure that this consent has been fully and freely obtained? A fearful temptation may be presented to frail human nature. Anything that would lessen the belief in the sacredness of the life that God has given—already somewhat weakened—must be looked at critically

Spiritual Significance of Remembrance Day.

Church of England Newspaper, November 12, 1935.

There are those who have advocated the desirability of ceasing to observe Armistice Day on the ground that a generation has grown up to whom that day has little or no meaning.

We cannot imagine how anyone can be so void of imagination or insight as not to realize that today the anniversary has a firmer hold on the hearts of our people than ever before. The deeper spiritual significance of the ceremonies at the Cenotaph, Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's and the Royal Exchange, as well as in all parts of the country, cannot be mistaken. Reports from towns and villages agree that the silence this year was more impressive than ever before. This may have been partly due to the international tension. One fact, however, is certain, a growing multitude of people are thinking of and praying positively and constructively for peace.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Freedom of the Spirit

It is wonderful to realize how free we are to exercise our spiritual powers and faculties; how complete and far-reaching is the liberty with which Christ has made us free. To begin with, through Him we "have access by one Spirit unto the Father." There is no such thing as freedom of access to those of high position in the world, the President of the United States for instance, but we are at liberty whenever we will, to enter into the Presence of God. In fact, this freedom of access is as easy and natural as coming into our own earthly homes. We can come in and out whenever we will and as often as we wish. When we feel oppressed with the limitations which beset us on every side in the things of this world, it is well to remind ourselves of the freedom of the spirit and its power to transcend the circumstances which seem so hard to deal with and overcome.

"Ask and Ye Shall Receive."

For freedom of access to the heavenly places means also the freedom to ask whatsoever we will from Him who has vastly more power to help us than anyone else. Our Lord laid great emphasis upon this entire freedom to ask whatsoever we will. For instance, there is His well-known saying:—"Ask and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you: For everyone that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." St. Matt. 7:7. Then there is that other saying of His:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name He will give it you. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name. Ask and ye shall receive that your joy may be full." St. John 16:23-24. These passages are clear enough and there are others which might be added, but those given are sufficient to prove that Christ came to give us complete spiritual freedom in making our wants and desires known unto God. It may be said that there are certain limitations with regard to a fulfilment of our desires for material blessings, inasmuch as only God knows what is best for us in matters of this kind. . But these limitations do not apply to spiritual blessings, especially those which have to do with a fuller and more perfect equipment for service to God and man. We know that God has created us for such service and it is impossible to say what heights the soul may attain to, even in this present life, when it is willing to meet all that God requires of it to fulfill His purpose.

"The Soul Has Eagles' Wings."

This is an age of aviation when in a very few years, by faith and a daring spirit of adventure, man has become master of the air as he previously became master of the sea, though in a vastly less space of time. What only half a century ago, was deemed by most of us to be impossible, has now been actually accomplished, and as this is being written, we are awaiting tidings of the China Clipper's safe arrival in the Orient, after traveling the width of the Pacific Ocean. We are told that we are only at the beginning of a vast extension of this novel means of transportation. Passenger traffic around the world may soon become as commonplace as crossing the Atlantic in one of our big steamships is now.

Spiritual Aviation.

But what about spiritual aviation? Man's soul is even better adapted to exercise freedom of movement in the spiritual world than his body is adapted to find its way through the air, for his body is dependent upon a machine to support him and to carry him to wherever he wishes to go, whereas the soul is entirely independent of any such artificial aid to accomplish its purpose. The heavenly places are within its reach in a moment of time. In fact time and space disappear altogether where the soul's activities are concerned. We do not know how great we are till we come to measure our possibilities in terms of our spiritual nature. We have become so immersed in material things, in our relationship to them, that we are like a caged eagle, unconscious of the power of flight which it possesses.

A World Transformed.

How completely the conditions of the world would be changed if we would only use the freedom wherewith Christ has made us free. This freedom implies that man is capable of making himself as much at home in the spiritual world as in this. Learning to fly is not the final step in his progress towards mastering his environment. He has not yet learned to realize all the resources which lie at his disposal through the wider exercise of his spiritual gifts and faculties. The human mind has been regarded as the means by which man attains to his highest achievements, but he has yet to find that the soul has greater means at its command for raising him to the highest level attainable in this present life.

The Soul's Contribution to Human Progress.

For since the soul has free access to the spiritual world and to the Presence of God, and has also the free right to ask for those higher blessings which God alone can give, and which He has promised to give, the future enrichment of human life and its steady advance towards perfection, depend upon the soul's contribution towards human progress. Christians, therefore, have the power at this critical period and turning point in human history, to bring to bear a decisive influence upon human affairs. For they are in close touch and contact with those spiritual forces which, when brought into play, will necessarily exercise a transforming influence upon world conditions.

The Service of Perfect Freedom.

Thou art the King, there is none else but Thee;
Thou art the King, and Thou hast set me free
With a complete and perfect liberty.

What can I do to show my love to Thee?
What can I do to set my brethren free,
That they may share Thine own sweet liberty?

My body shall be Thine to use each day;
My body shall be Thine, its lips to pray,
Its feet to follow in Thy narrow way.

Its hands shall be Thine own stretched out to bless;
Its hands shall be Thine own in tenderness
To heal the wounds of many in distress.

So can I show my love to Thee, O Lord,
So hands and feet and lips with one accord,
In serving Thee, shall find their great reward.

Frederick W. Neve.

The Kingdom of God and the Second Coming of Christ

II. The Situation In The New Testament

By CHARLES W. LOWRY, JR.,

Associate Professor of Systematic Divinity, Virginia Theological Seminary.

Last week in treating of the background of the conception of the Kingdom of God and the Second Coming of Christ, we noted and attempted to get some idea of apocalyptic. Such a first step is absolutely requisite to any real understanding of the New Testament. This is not to say that such preparation guarantees accurate knowledge or that nothing else is needed. But it is quite certain that any understanding the person not thus prepared has, will be misunderstanding. He will be like an heresiarch of the second century, Marcion, who undertook in his interpretation of Christianity to plant himself squarely upon the writings of St. Paul. The result has been exhaustively summarized by von Harnack in a celebrated epigram: "Only Marcion understood Paul, and his misunderstood him."

The essential idea of apocalyptic was the imminence of God's manifestation of Himself in power, overthrowing this evil order and ushering in a new world in which His will would be done. Thus it stimulated, as it had arisen out of, expectation. Due to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Roman armies in 70 A. D., our sources for Judaism at the beginning of this era are scanty and we cannot be sure in any detail as to the extent of the hold apocalyptic expectation had over the contemporaries and countrymen of Jesus Christ. But there is good reason to think expectancy of "things to come on the earth" was very much in the air and that this is the background of the successful preaching of John the Baptist. His Gospel was one of repentance, but repentance alone has never been a message that has attracted multitudes of men. "Repent ye: the Kingdom of God is at hand," is another matter.

Certain it is that it was the Gospel of the Kingdom which Jesus preached in the early part of His ministry and that He regarded its proclamation as His first task. "Now after that John was delivered up," says St. Mark, "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the Gospel of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the Kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the Gospel" (1:14, 15). When, on the morning after the first great day of healing, Simon and others came to the Lord praying in a solitary place, and said, "All are seeking thee," He replied, "Let us go elsewhere into the next towns, that I may preach there also; for to this end came I forth" (Mark 1:36-38; Cf. Luke 4:42, 43). One of the aims behind the calling and training of the twelve was the extension of this preaching ministry. "These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them . . . As ye go, preach, saying, The Kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. 10:5-7). And according to St. Matthew, further, Jesus said to the twelve: "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come" (10:23).

If this verse be accounted authentic, it would seem that Jesus did not, up to the time of its utterance, think of Himself as the Son of man in a Messianic sense. The center of his thought was still preaching the Kingdom. On the other hand, evidence like that of the expanded temptation narratives of St. Matthew and St. Luke supports the more familiar view that Jesus' Messianic consciousness dates from His baptism. Whatever the case with regard to His early thinking about Himself (and it cannot be said that there is any consensus of scholarly opinion here), it is clear that before Peter's confession (Mark 8:27ff; Matt. 16:13ff; Luke 9:18ff). Jesus, who at His baptism had heard God's voice declare, Thou art my Son, had reached the conviction that He was the Messiah: and this involved, as the whole sequel shows, the identification of Himself in some sense with the Figure spoken of in Daniel and Enoch.

But there is one completely new thing. It scandalized the disciples then; it has been a stumbling-block to many ever since. But it lies close to the heart of Christianity. Jesus accepted Peter's declaration; asserted according to St. Matthew that it represented a revelation to him from God Himself; commanded His disciples to maintain silence regarding this great Fact; then quietly went on: "The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected . . . and be killed." And when Peter still flushed with pleasure at the Master's praise, undertakes boldly to correct such an unthinkable doctrine, the Lord is sternness itself "Get thee behind me, Satan."

This conclusion of the episode brings out the clarity and depth of Christ's final conviction. Before its implications He never retreats or falters. Thenceforward His goal is Jerusalem and the condemnation and execution which He knows await Him there. "He stedfastly set His face to go to Jerusalem" (Luke 9:51). "Howbeit I must go on my way today and tomorrow and the day following: for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem" (Luke 13:33). Thus Jesus' full thought of Himself is compounded out of three concepts: Son of God, Son of man (the Christ, the Messiah), and the Suffering Servant (Isaiah 42; 49; 53). All figure prominently in the scene and confession that constitute the climax of the trial and that seal the fate of Jesus. "Again the high priest asked him, and saith unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed? And Jesus said, I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting at the right hand of power, and coming with the clouds of heaven. . . . And they all condemned him to be worthy of death" (Mark 14:61, 62, 64).

This leads us to consider the preaching and doctrine of the Apostles and the Epistles of St. Paul. So far we have been addressing ourselves to the situation in the Synoptic or first three Gospels. And the interesting and arresting thing is that the early chapters of the Acts and St. Paul's views, as they disclose themselves progressively in his own writings, tie on directly to the account of Jesus we have given, albeit over-briefly and sketchily. Any contrary interpretation of Jesus which also takes seriously New Testament history as a whole is forced to posit a breach of continuity between Christ's teaching and Apostolic preachment. It can resist only with the greatest difficulty, if at all, the dilemmas posed by the older more extreme (and logical) Liberalism: Jesus versus Paul (or more scientifically: Jesus versus the Apostles, including Paul who did indeed inaugurate new developments of far-reaching importance); the religion of Jesus versus the religion about Jesus.

An analysis of the first eight chapters of the Acts and of St. Paul's letters will, I believe, support these assertions. The central theme of the first apostolic preaching is Jesus as the Christ or Messiah. "Let all the house of Israel therefore know assuredly that God hath made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom ye crucified" (Acts 2:36; Cf. 5:42). Him God raised from the dead, "whereof we are witnesses" (2:32; 3:15), and has exalted to His own right hand (2:33), where He must remain "until the times of restoration of all things, whereof God spake by the mouth of His holy prophects" (3:21). Meantime men are exhorted to repent, to believe on Christ, in whose name there is remission of sins, and to wait for the day of the Lord when Jesus Christ shall be manifest as Judge and God's perfect reign or Kingdom shall begin (2:20, 21, 34, 35, 38; 3:19, 20, 21; 5:31; 8:12; and especially 17:30, 31).

The last of the above references introduces St. Paul. And when we turn to his letters, we find a situation similar to that of the Acts, though one of the things he does is progressively to amplify the primitive apostolic Christology and this has the effect of rendering relatively less prominent the eschatological element in his teachings. At least this is true of the later epistles. 1 Thessalonians (written A. D. 51 or 52) is highly apocalyptic. "We that are alive . . . shall in no wise precede them that are fallen asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air" (4:15-17). Galatians (date uncertain: possibly 49; possibly 55-56), is almost entirely lacking in references to the second coming. But 1 Corinthians (written in 55 or 56) shows that St. Paul's views remain substantially unaltered. "Wherefore judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come" (4:5). "But each in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; then they that are Christ's, at his coming" (15:23; see verse 24ff; Cf. 16:22; maranatha"—Our Lord cometh. Also 1:7, 8; 11:26). Romans (written in 57) is to be compared with Galatians, but the Epistle for the First Sunday in Advent is taken from it and 2:5, 16 should be noted. When finally we turn to Philippians and Colossians (written from prison c. 62), it is true that the emphasis is not on the return of Christ. Yet St. Paul says definitely, "The Lord is at hand" (Phi. 4:5; Cf. 1:6, 10; 2:16; 3:20, 21), and "When Christ, who is our life, appears, then shall ye also appear with him in Glory" (Col. 3:4).

This brings out St. Paul's general position with regard to eschatology. We see the essential relation of his conceptions to the earliest Christian thinking on the subject and the continuity of both with the thought of Jesus. In the words of Prof. Nairne, "Thus we see how naturally Paul's creed, which is the infant church's creed, springs out of the Galilean Gospel, just as the Galilean Gospel had sprung naturally out of Judaism."

But it would be a mistake to conclude that there has been no development. There has and it has hinged on an important shift of cardinal emphasis: from the Kingdom of God to the person and work of Christ. It is Christ who is central in St. Paul's epistles. It is He who is to come again and who is to reign. The idea of the Kingdom remains but it is rather in the background than in the foreground of the picture. Moreover, where at first the Kingdom is definitely earthly with regard to its location, in line with Jewish thought, St. Paul seems to view it as more heavenly than earthly. At any rate, as bodies that now are of the earth earthy are to be changed into spiritual bodies ("flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God", 1 Cor. 15:50), so the earth is to be transformed. The coming order will be radically new: it will be as it were the full actualization of a status and relation that are already heavenly ("Our citizenship is in heaven", Phi. 3:20; note also verse 21). This new status and potentiality of nature are grounded on the work of Christ, who is thus by the one Spirit active and a reality here and now. In these and other ways St. Paul represents a notable stage of development in primitive Christian thought and looks toward the conceptions of a profound and fearless thinker who around A. D. 100-110 wrote what we know as the Gospel according to St. John. It is with a notice of this work that the third article will begin.

der is that we do not find empty piety in Phillips Brooks.

But Phillips Brooks saved the older school of evangelicals. He filled empty phrases with new meanings. He attracted young men to the ministry that had heard no challenge from others. His ministry to a whole community was the inspiration that has made the Episcopal Church one with greater influence than her numerical membership justifies. In a day when a narrow ecclesiasticism was growing in popularity, he proclaimed a Gospel that measured up to the greatness of the Love found in Our Lord Jesus Christ. No narrow theories of churchmanship or orders was possible to the follower of Phillips Brooks, and he has had a succession of men who at least caught his spirit even if they could not always have his genius.

America and Christianity owe much to the ministry of Phillips Brooks. At Christmas time when we sing his great Christmas hymn, we might thank God that we have had the benefit of his life in our midst.

O Little town of Bethlehem!
How still we see thee lie;
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The silent stars go by;;
Yet in thy dark streets shineth
The everlasting Light;
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee to-night.

O holy Child of Bethlehem!
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us to-day.
We hear the Christmas angels
The great glad tidings tell;
Oh, come to us, abide with us,
Our Lord Emmanuel!

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN COMPANY

Church Parties and the Challenge of Our Day

By WILLIAM S. LEA,

Assistant, St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

ONE OF THE MOST significant developments during these last few months is the increasing tendency of our Church parties to unite and cooperate in movements which transcend their differences. Whether this is the beginning of a new age in the Church, in which these party quarrels of the past will be eliminated, we cannot say, but certainly there is a challenge now for each one of us to examine his own attitude in the matter. Isn't it time, after all, that we begin to see the inefficiency brought about by the waste of enery which results when we fight each other instead of the forces which oppose the Church of Christ as a whole? One of the first principles of military strategy, and one with which the devil seems well acquainted, is the division of the enemy army, so that the parts become isolated and detached from each other, in which case it is possible to meet and overcome the parts one at a time, whereas it might be impossible to defeat the army if united. Perhaps we are beginning to discover the need for a united front today, because we are beginning to see our problems as common problems. Catholics and Protestants, Liberals and Fundamentalists, all face the spread of materialistic philosophy. We face together the demands of a Totalitarian state in Germany, in Russia, and in Italy. In other words, this modern world is not a time for quibbling about terminology and about trivialities—it is not a time for division, but for unity.

During this last week I have been reading four important religious journals, and in each of them I discovered an article with direct bearing upon the subject in question. The Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral in London, the Very Rev. W. H. Matthews, in his opening address as President of the Modern Churchmen's Union, had these words to say:

> "I can see no reason why we should not in the future include a large number of Liberal Catholics." . . . Modernists should above all men be jealous for the comprehensiveness of the Church." . . . "There is a great need for the thinking out of a Modernist conception of the Catholic Church." . . . "We who believe in the necessity of the Church should pray that its members may be given a sense of proportion." (And we might add, a sense of humour also.)
> —(The Modern Churchman, October, 1935.)

The Very Rev. S. C. Carpenter, the Dean of Exeter, and editor of "Theology", has an answer to this address by the Dean of St. Paul's in the current edition of "Theology". Says he:

> "Some claims we must make, and face the charges of smugness and complacency which will certainly be launched. We must believe ourselves more right than others; else there would be no defense for standing where we do. But if ever the claim is made to possess the whole truth, to be so verily 'the people', as Job wittily expressed it, that wisdom is like to die with us, then follows, swift and inevitable, the verdict that 'whatever else is true, that certainly is false'. That claim must always be repudiated, and when there are signs that Liberals are becoming really liberal, then more than ever Catholics must be really catholic."
> —(Theology, October, 1935).

When the last issue of the "Living Church" came, I was delighted to find that the leading editorial dealt with the subject of my paper. The title of the editorial is "Humor in the Ministry", and in it there is told the story of a trip which the late Fr. Huntington made to Kentucky. He was to hold a week's mission in a parish church. The rector met him at the train with these words:

> "The whole parish is eagerly awaiting you. I know that you will do a great work for their souls. But there is one thing I am afraid of: my people are not accustomed to calling the clergy 'Father'. They regard it as Roman Catholic. Is there something else we might call you that they are used to, and could not possibly think Roman?" Fr. Huntington's eyes twinkled, so the story goes, and he answered thus: "Tell them to call me 'Colonel'." Then he added serious: "What they call me, my dear brother, is not of prime importance."

In a somewhat different mood, I was reading the last issue of the "Expository Times" of Edinburgh, and in an article by the Rev. Professor J. M. Shaw, called "The Problem of the Cross", I ran across these words:

> "Our faith does not rest upon a theory but upon a fact.
> "Not indeed that we can rest in the fact simply, without some theory or interpretation of the fact. As rational beings, called to serve God with our minds as well as with our hearts and lives, we inevitably seek to set our Christian experience and religious evaluation of the fact of Christ's death in intelligible relations with the rest of our knowledge of God and man. But the fact of first essentiality and importance is our experience of and conviction as to the religious significance of the fact. Just as in the matter of the sun's relationship to the earth, the important thing is the sun's life and heat which blessed men before there were any theories about or explanation of the sun's action."
> —(The Expository Times, October, 1935.)

Now I do not make these quotations at random, nor without purpose, for it seems to me that each of them expresses something about the author which is significant. The point is that I can well imagine their sitting together and discussing their religion as gentlemen, working together, and, indeed, discovering that the things which they hold in common are of much more importance than their differences. I believe that these four selections from four different, and differing, religious journals show us something about the spirit of our times.

OUR DENOMINATIONAL differences are strange mysteries to heathen peoples, but our divisions within the Anglican Communion are no less mysterious to other Christian people. Some of us younger members of the clergy are rather impatient with this business of Church parites. Some of us are too naive in the faith to see why ever we shall have to "join" any of them—or is it really because we are naive? We should like to be Catholics, and we should like to be Liberals, and we should like to be Evangelicals all at once. Each of these seem to us to have an emphasis which we need. We feel the need of the Catholic emphasis in our religion, the principle of historic continuity, of the corporate nature of the Church, the value of the sacraments, the idea of ordered development of Christian doctrine and the wisdom of valuing the accumulated experience of Christians, and the dignity and beauty of worship. But we should like to think of the Keys of Saint Peter as being more to open than to close, and catholicity more of comprehensiveness than of exclusivness. We are convinced, at the same time, that we must be liberal, as we understand liberality to be one of the attributes of true gentlemen. In this connection, we do not speak of the older sort of liberalism which couldn't make up its mind about anything, and which thinking men have had to reject because of its thinness. Liberalism is, to us, an attitude which we all need, an attitude of mental growth, of alertness to the advances in human thought, of open-mindedness, and of fairness to other opinions than our own. Above all else, we should like to be really Evangelical. We feel the need of an Evangelical faith, and one which burns with a real passion for the Cause of Christ in our world, and is not afraid to proclaim the Gospel to the wide earth. We should like to be liberal Catholics, and liberal Evangelicals, but above all else, we want to be adventurous Christians.

The trouble with these Church parties is that none of them live up even to their names. A true Catholic would be, as Dean Carpenter said, truly catholic, as a true Liberal would be really liberal. A real Evangelical would be really evangelical in his devotion to the Christ which is above "evangelicalism". If we examine the spirit of these parties at all honestly, we shall see that their ideals are really comprehensive of each other, and should be complementary. One aspect of magnanimity, or "large-souledness", is the ability to see other people's points of view, not as cold and objective phenomena, but as living impulses from living souls, like one's own. We must learn to see through other people's eyes, and learn by listening to their hearts that back of their movements and "parties" are longings, and dreams, and hopes, and loyalties, not at all unlike those which spring from our own hearts. With these thoughts in mind, some of us desire not to be "Low" Churchmen, nor "High" Churchmen, but as Temple Gairdener of Cairo put it, we want to be "Deep" Churchmen.

WE MUST be realistic enough to realize that it isn't at all likely, nor even desirable, that we shall agree in every point concerning anything so great as the Gospel of our Blessed Lord. Perhaps we would have to revolt against the monotony of it if immediately we all began to think alike. But some of our differences are too stupid, and trivial to be tolerated. They remind me of a story which Father Gillie tells of a heresy in Asia. He says that he found almost a religious war over the question of the direction in which prayer wheels should be turned. The heretical Bonpas insisted in turning their wheels from West to East, whereas from time immemorial the orthodox have turned their wheels from East to West. The whole argument centered about the heretcs' insistance upon turning their wheels the heretical way, by which action it was thought they were unwinding the prayers of all the people through the centuries. When we view our differences realistically we shall see that they aren't very different from this. Then perhaps at last we shall find that we need most of all is a sense of humour.

The Forward Movement of the Church has called us forward together, and already we are seeing a type of cooperation which has been unknown in the past. Do we begin to see the dangers of a house divided against itself? The Episcopal Church stands against secetarian bitterness, or else it dwindles into a most insignificant sectarianism itself. It is our spirit of comprehensiveness which makes us large. We must see ourselves as individuals but members of a Movement which is greater than our individual selves. We need this sense of proportion which comes when we see ourselves as parts in a Movement which transcends our private opinions, our little schemes, our petty prejudices, and the parties which grow out of all these. And when we take ourselves too seriously as regards the "trimmings", or the "lack of trimmings", we need to laugh. The things of Christ are more important.

We stand in the midst of men today—with a principle of historic unity and of liberal advance into the future—we reach both ways, and our roots are deep. We must reach out in all directions, we must be comprehensive, or else we merely get in the way of other people who take the Gospel more seriously.

Building the Church School Program

By A GROUP OF DIRECTORS OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION OF THE PROVINCE OF WASHINGTON.

By group participation, group thinking and group leadership the Church Schools of the Province can release much undeveloped power for Christian growth.

The Forward Movement expresses the need "to reinvigorate the life of the Church and to rehabilitate its general, diocesan and parochial work." Is one cause of our weakness that too often plans are dictated by the few? And in our haste, do we think of programs to be "put over" rather than of people to be developed through participation?

Growth in Christian life and character will come as each person is helped to find his part in the fellowship of the Church and to fulfill his responsibility for the good of the whole. It is vital, but not easy, to fit each one to a place in the life of the parish.

Individual contributions naturally vary according to age and ability. The encouraging feature in group work is that the total result is more than all the individual contributions added together. New relationships, the interplay of minds and the influence of personalities working together create new values. The corporate spirit which emerges often has great import.

The leader must recognize his function if he is to be effective in group work. He is not a dictator standing above the group, but a member within and behind the group. He seeks a part for everyone, fosters ideas, relates the interests of the members and helps the group to cultivate higher desires and ideals.

In the Church we have many groups—families, Church school classes, teachers, parents, young people, vestries, parish organizations and others. Can we do more to develop the power which we know lies in them?

Dictated by the Few.

Just one week before Christmas the Sunday School Superintendent of St. ———'s Parish suddenly became aware of the fact that Christmas was right around the corner! Muttering to himself, "I have to do everything in this Sunday School," he hurried to a book store during his lunch hour, hastily bought a Christmas pageant, called Miss Blank that evening and informed her that she would be in charge of putting it on.

On Sunday morning Miss Blank, leaving her class to the tender mercies of a startled member of the Bible class, obtained the pageant from the Superintendent, hurriedly listed the names of the Sunday-school children who usually acted in all the plays and pageants, and interrupted a dozen classes in a frantic effort to assemble the cast. She assigned the parts and called a rehearsal that afternoon, only to discover that, owing to previous engagements, only about half of the cast could attend.

After spending anxious days trying to assemble costumes, Miss Blank, arriving weary and worn for the final rehearsal in the Church, at last got the pageant under way. Just at the close of the rehearsal the rector happened in, and Miss Blank was told that the pageant was not suitable for the Church and must be presented in the Parish House. The now tired and confused children were herded over to the Parish House, only to discover that a Boy Scout supper was in the process of preparation and all space was in use. As nothing else could be done, Miss Blank implored the children to come as early as possible the following afternoon to rehearse before the actual time for the presentation of the pageant.

Somehow Miss Blank got them into their costumes, and with makeshift scenery hastily prepared by the janitor, and with much coaching, the cast stumbled through their parts. Few people were present. Even the rector had another engagement.

When Bobby Smith came home after the pageant was all over, his father, looking up inquiringly from his paper, asked, "Where've you been, son, you look tired?"

"You'd be tired, too," said Bobby, "if you'd been through what I have!"

It was reported the next day that Miss Blank was in bed ill with grippe!

Developed Through Participation.

It was early November, and at a meeting of the Church School teachers and officers of St. ———'s Parish plans for the Advent and Christmas season were being discussed. Miss Jones, the adviser of the Student Council (composed of one representative from each class in the Church school from the fifth grade up), reported that this group suggested that the Christmas Festival this year take the form of a pageant. One teacher suggested that two parents, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Smith, could give excellent assistance in making the costumes. Another teacher reported that a boy had said his brother would be home from college for the holidays and was a wizard at lighting effects. Mrs. Blank, a member of the congregation, and also the high school dramatic teacher, was suggested as a possible director. Miss Jones, having been appointed chairman of the committee, composed of the Rector, Superintendent, a Church School parent and two members of the Student Council and a representative of the Y. P. F., started gaily on her way armed with the suggestions of the group.

Two weeks later, the pageant having been selected by the committee, the student representatives outlined the Christmas plans to the Church School on Sunday morning and asked that all those interested in taking part in the pageant meet at the Parish House the following afternoon.

A group of boys and girls, exceeding the number necessary for the cast, arrived the next afternoon. The rector, in a short talk, helped the children to realize their responsibility in bringing the meaning of Christmas home to all who would see the pageant, and so enlisted their cooperation that they took real interest in helping Miss Jones and the Dramatic Director select from the group present those best fitted for their respective parts. A schedule of rehearsals was then drawn up and later posted on the bulletin board in the Parish House.

The Parish was soon buzzing with interest over the Christmas Pageant. The Junior Choir practiced carols to be sung, the Church School pupils were busy discovering the stories back of the Christmas hymns, studying about Christmas customs in other lands, finding out about shepherd life in Eastern lands, and making programs to be given out at the door on the day of the pageant. Mothers were busy assembling costumes and the young people's group was making plans for decorating the Church.

When the day finally arrived a large congregation of parents, friends and Church School boys and girls truly worshipped while the beauty of the simple and reverent pageant brought home again the real meaning of the first Christmas Day. As the Smith family walked home together at the close of the pageant, ten year old Billy exclaimed, "Gee! I wish everybody in the world could know about Christmas!"

Opportunities.

In Church School work opportunities for group participation abound at all seasons.

Sometimes a whole school can work together on a project, and even invite some organization to have a share in it. Sometimes the primary, or another department, will put all its classes to work on a joint enterprise. Occasionally the parents or the vestry can be pressed into service. A good class always offers plenty of opportunity for full participation to each of its members.

In one parish the whole school worked together on a Day of Prayer in this way.

Before Lent a committee of teachers and parents discussed how to make Lent mean more to the boys and girls. They decided to propose to the Student Council a day of prayer on the last Saturday in Lent. The Student Council liked the idea and wanted it to be A Day of Prayer for the Peace of the World.

The Student Council asked all the classes to discuss this and to contribute prayers for peace. The material was sorted and put in shape by the Rector and some teachers and Council members. It was then mimeographed in a folder by several young people.

On Palm Sunday a member of the Student Council explained the purpose of the Day of Prayer to the whole school, and told how the boys and girls could sign up for fifteen minute periods in the church.

The Day arrived and boys and girls, teachers and parents came and went all day. The Council members were in evidence and took the responsibility for the necessary details.

Results: Deeper conception of prayer. Experience of going into church alone for prayer. More active interest in peace. Realization of the value of corporate effort.

In another parish eighth grade pupils participated in entertaining a visitor in this way:—

The girls, studying about the parish, were making a list of the parish organizations. The suggestion was made, either by a pupil or the teacher, that a member of the Woman's Auxiliary be asked to come to the class to tell about the Auxiliary, as it was the largest organization in the parish.

The class decided on a date and two girls wrote the letter of invitation. A committee of two agreed to call for the visitor. The whole class planned questions to ask, such as, What is the Woman's Auxiliary? What does it do?

When the vistor came and told that the Auxiliary was studying about Japan, the girls offered to collect pictures of Japan and to make a map for the Auxiliary. This was done and one girl brought a lovely kimono her aunt had sent her from Japan. Several representatives of the class took these articles to the next Auxiliary meeting.

Results: The girls gained a new interest in missionary work and a realization that their Lenten Offering and the Auxiliary's work for Japan were all parts of the same great missionary work of the Church.

Programs Are Woven Into Branch Activities

Branches working without a program for the year are exceptions to the rule since the value of having a year's program has been demonstrated. A program is an expression of desire and aim, and should in no way hamper initiative.

That service in different localities should vary according to needs, is unquestioned; but some branches which follow a suggestive diocesan program of service, claim an advantage over branches which do not, that advantage arising, in great degree, though the spirit of oneness that comes with corporate effort and through the feeling that results may be greater. Members generally know of this feeling through experience in participating in the general work of the Woman's Auxiliary.

That a program may be sufficiently elastic to admit of variations, is shown by these news items from dioceses, curtailed in number by space limitations:

Alabama:

Diocesan programs have been sent to each branch in sufficient number for study. These programs give suggestions for study, work, and gifts, arranged for each month. That for the present month is given:

December.

Missions: Missionary from Alabama to Japan, the Rev. Kenneth Morris, Kyoto, Japan.

Religious Education: The Church and Family Relations.

Christian Social Service: How Shall a Christian Family Celebrate Christmas?

Work: Social Service in the Community.

Gifts: (Quota for the Rev. Kenneth Morris comes in February); Christmas Cards to Prayer Partners.

Contributions to the House of Happiness continue. The mission there is steadily growing. A class of sixteen was confirmed at the Bishop's recent visit.

Connecticut.

The department of religious education of the Woman's Auxiliary in Connecticut has isued a Calendar of 1935-1936 in the form of a useful, attractive folder. Its purpose and use were explained at the fall meetings of the archdeaconries, where the plans for the season's program and work were discussed by diocesan and archdeaconry officers.

Milwaukee.

Churchwomen of the Diocese of Milwaukee participated in a diocesan Service of Presentation at All Saints' Cathedral, November 20, when the Thank Offering treasurer of each parish, or some one delegated by her, presented the offering already collected by her branch. Aside from stated parish representatives, a number of others came for their part in this sacrificial service.

Delegates to the provincial synod held at Rock Island reported at the diocesan meeting following the Presentation Service. At the neighborhood meeting held recently at St. Luke's, Bay View, Miss Elsie Sharp. a returned missionary from Baguio, Philippine Islands, addressed the meeting.

Louisiana.

The three divisions of the Woman's Auxiliary of Trinity Parish, New Orleans, are marked by enthusiastic, well-attended meetings. Section "A" had thirty-two members present, with all officers present and reporting. Plans were made for the Christmas box which goes to Grace House on the Mountain, St. Paul, Virginia, and for remembering the prayer-partners with gifts at Christmas. One feature of these meetings is a "current topics" talk given at each meeting.

Section "B" heard the chairmen and various committees announced by its president and plans announced for the year. Arrangements were made for meeting pledges. The social service committee reported having made nineteen wrappers and rolled 1,080 bandages, this being two months' work.

Section "C" held its meeting in the evening with fifteen members present. Work reported included the distribution of seventy-five books during the summer, a visit to Bethany Home, donations made for delegates and for reducing the deficit in this year's pledges. Plans for the Christmas box were discussed.

North Texas.

At St. Mark's, Plainview, the president of the branch presented the subject of Baptism as set forth in Bible, Prayer Book, and Church history. This branch is following a regular program of worship, study, and service for 1935-1936.

The Woman's Auxiliary of St. Andrew's, Amarillo, felt their first Corporate Communion of the season meant much to them. Following that service, a book, "The Younger Churchmen Look at the Church", was reviewed, making a strong impression on the whole gathering.

The branch at All Saints, Colorado, reports cheerful acceptance of its box quota, and its subject for study as being "Evangelism in the Church." A review of "Outfitting for Spiritual Marriage" (Floyd Van Keuren; Morehouse) is to be given by the rector at an early date.

At San Angelo it is planned to devote one meeting a month to the study of the Church's Mission. The responsibility of preparing these programs devolves upon their educational secretary, and all feel a profitable year is opening.

The branch at Trinity Mission, Quannah, has been reorganized. A series of mid-week services were started by the rector with the purpose of studying and discussing the Church, its history and practices. Each alternate week there is an open discussion on some topic suggested by the talk of the preceding week.

At the Church of the Heavenly Rest, Abilene, the Woman's Auxiliary heard at its recent gathering a missionary speaker, Mrs. Robert T. Bridges, who told of her experiences as a missionary in the Bahama Islands. At the preceding meeting of the group, the life of Kagawa was reviewed.

Latitude, Five Degrees South.

On furlough at home in a northern city at Christmas time, Miss Lucy Willoughby, an English missionary from Papua, under the equator, writes:

"I am thoroughly enjoying the lovely Christmassy feeling that is everywhere. How lovely the city looks with its gay shops and decorated streets! But still,—there is a land called Papua where the sun is always hot, and where white ants eat our houses, and small brown ants eat our clothes and food, and where mosquitoes are always merry and bright, and where the people are brown in color, and have a different speech and outlook on life. And some are Christians and some are not. This is the land and these are the people who are calling me back. And in the early new year I hope to go."

NEWS FROM THE FRONT

Rev. G. W. Gasque

CHINESE GIRLS SEND EMBROIDERY TO HAWAII AS MEMORIAL. TO SUN YAT SEN.

Honolulu, Hawaii.—On a recent Sunday there was a special ceremony in the temporary chapel and assembly hall of Iolani in connection with the presentation to Iolani by a government school at Kashing, China, of a piece of embroidery of special significance. It is the will of Sun Yat Sen, embroidered in white on a purple gackground, made by girl-students in China, and presented in recognition of the years when China's great modern hero was a student at Iolani. It is especially pleasant and appropriate that Sun Yat Sen's daughter, Miss Sally Y. Sun, was present, as was also Consul-General Mui. Miss Sun arrived recently in Honolulu to study at the University of Hawaii, after having been graduated from the True Light School at Canton.

Pictures From Colonel Iaukea.

The new dormitory, named in honor of the school's oldest living graduate, who has taken such a conspicuous and dramatic part in the life of Hawaii, has received two valued gifts from Colonel Iaukea. One is a picture of himself, and the other his personal copy of the great Jubilee Service in Westminster Abbey in 1887, when he was present along with the Queen of Hawaii, Kapiolani, and the Princess Liliuokalani. These gifts add colorful interest to the life of the school, which has been steadily building up its store of historical traditions for the past seventy-five years.

Much-Needed Assistance.

The Rev. Thurston R. Hinckley, probation officer on Kauai, has accepted the invitation of the Vicar and Vestry of All Saints' Church, Kapaa, to become an honorary assistant to Archdeacon Willey. Mr. Hinckley's work as probation officer has become highly effective, and he is able in addition to give real help in the Church work at Kapaa and Eleele.

Robert Kondo, local young man of leadership and ability, became a full time assistant to Mr. Willey last month. We are glad that men have been found to share with the Archdeacon the responsibilities of his widespread work.

St. Alban's Chapel at Iolani.

Plans for the Chapel to be erected in memory of Bishop La Mothe are nearly completed. It is expected that the work on the building will be started soon. The sum of $24,000, given by the Church Schools of the country in their last Birthday Thank Offering, will cover the main cost of the Building. Articles of furniture and of decoration however will be needed, especially for the sanctuary. There is opportunity for many memorial gifts, such as the altar, the altar brasses, the font, and almost all the necesasry parts of the furnishings of the building.

The Day School.

After the summer holidays, St. Elizabeth's opened for her usual activities. The day school, which is one of the leading features of the Mission, opened with an enrollment of 128 all in attendance. This is larger than last year, which closed with 112 pupils. The Church Sunday School started its sessions in September, with an attendance of seventy and an enrollment of over one hundred.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

PRAYER FOR HONOLULU.

Almighty God, Lord of the Harvest of Souls, we pray Thee to guide and bless the Bishop and other workers of the Philippine Islands. Pour out Thy Spirit upon them, to strengthen them in their weakness, to comfort them in their trials, to direct them in all their endeavors. Open the hearts of the people to receive their message. And help us in our daily lives, and prayers, and giving, to share with them their problems and successes; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

FIREPLACE IN NEVADA MISSION CONTAINS STONE FROM ST. ALBAN'S CATHEDRAL.

Reno, Nevada.—Worked into the fireplace stone in the new St. Alban's Mission, Yerington, is a piece of twelfth century stone, from St. Alban's Cathedral, England, given to the Bishop of Nevada, when he visited the Cathedral while in England for the recent Lambeth Conference.

The fireplace is made of stones and rock gathered from all over Nevada by the Bishop on his travels, being bright colored rock, some containing copper and other minerals which give them bright colors. A brass-plate is being prepared for the fireplace mantel to indicate the source of the stone from St. Alban's, England.

The altar linens are also gifts from England, and the altar is the work of the Rev. F. D. Graves, of the University Chapel, being simply but beautifully carved, and illuminated to give color and life to the chancel.

Deaconess Lillian Todd, who has been on a year's leave of absence to take further study in nursing, has returned to Nevada. During the month of October she was substitute nurse at St. Mary's Indian Mission, during the absence of Miss Katherine Ledgard, who was called East by illness, but the return early in November of Miss Ledgard enabled Deaconess Todd to return to her work on the Indian Reservation at Moapa.

Irene Westerlund, fifteen-year-old sister to Dinah and also a pupil at St. Mark's, Nenana, Alaska, designed and made a dress that won her honoroble mention in a large field of entries at Sears, Roebuck and Company's dress-making contest.

Election Day in Baguio.

We have often deplored the changes that are affecting the tranquil lives of these gentle Igorot people. The hand of "civilization" — so-called — has reached even to remote villages, and today, Election Day, truckload after truckload of excited, yelling voters is making its way to the polls. The streets of Baguio are being treated to a boisterous hilarity, that would have seemed impossible a few years ago. The old people are of course now, as always, conservative. Just at present an Ilocano woman is alarming them with the prediction that there will be total darkness for two months after the inauguration of the commonwealth. Each family, she says, must provide itself with two pails of water!

A Funeral in Besao.

A woman had been drowned crossing a stream and her body recovered the next day. After perhaps ten hours of debate our new lay worker, Robert Pekas, was able to notify the priest that the funeral would be held at St. Anne's Church at three o'clock. But the priest, when he got to the church, found nobody.

Some showers, prelude of the next typhoon, had begun and the bereaved family had been persuaded by their wrinkled counsellors that it was unlucky to bury a drowned person in the rain. Water had been her undoing so apparently she deserved at least a dry burial. First, Mr. Pekas brought this message; next, a delegation accompanied him to stress the awful consequences of such an act. In this colloquy Mr. Pekas rather rashly avowed his willingness to accept the consequences.

Finally, the priest in cassock and black stole went down to the hut where the body lay in putrescent state. Here he found a group of old men, all drunk and prepared to talk endlessly and without the slightest relevance to the issue in hand. Among the mourners were numerous Christians, many of the semi- and demi-semi- type. In the end a mass appeal to their consciences—more accurately, to the superstitious side of their consciences—caused the funeral to be held, and perhaps the uncomfortable threat of having the priest with them all night.

One envies earlier missionaries their sincere use of hell-fire in dealing with primitive people; it is a handicap to try instilling the incentive of love in minds responsive only to fear. It tempts one to use short-cuts; but short-cuts, no matter how immediately effective they may seem, replace backward savages with bribed or intimidated Christians —and the last state is worse than the first.

Changes in Bontoc.

The mission field is truly a place of comings and goings, of greetings and farewells. On the same day, we said good-bye to Mrs. Brady, who has given three years of faithful service to the Mission, and welcomed Miss Fredin, returning from furlough.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

Young People's Fellowship---Mexico

With the new highway being opened up to Mexico City as announced in the daily press and in the movies, we will doubtless have a great number of our people taking a trip by car through our nearest neighbor to the South.

Thus the following program on our Church's work in that country comes in most appropriately at this time. If a more extended study is desired, we would refer the Leaguers to files of the Spirit of Missions and also to an excellent little pamphlet published by the National Council that may be obtained free of charge. Its title is "Mexico Today." It may be gotten by writing the Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Program on Mexico.

(Prepared by Miss Grace Fausett, Grace Church, Ocala, Florida.)

Characters: Leaguer and Missionary.

Leaguer: You have just returned from Mexico. Will you tell us about our Church work in that country?

Missionary: The Episcopal Church is firmly established there. We have two schools; there are several churches. There has been a law passed that religion may not be taught in any school in the country, but our missionaries have not been asked to leave the country.

Leaguer: How can the missionaries carry on the work, if they cannot teach the children about Jesus in School?

Missionary: The missionaries teach the children about health, cleanliness, sanitation, loyalty and high ideals. None of these things can be considered contrary to the law. The children can learn about Jesus when they go to church and Sunday school, and see how to live by the way the teachers act towards them.

Leaguer: Do the children and people go to church and Sunday school often enough to learn very much about our Master?

Missionary: Yes, the people are eager to attend the services. They think nothing of walking from five to eight miles to church; and many ride long distances on horseback. Even people who do not belong to our church ask our missionaries for advice and help.

Leaguer: Are all the clergymen and teachers people who have gone from our country to Mexico?

Missionary: No, there are twenty Episcopal clergymen in Mexico. Fifteen of them are Mexicans. There are thirty-seven teachers in our schools and thirty-one of them are Mexican men or women.

Leaguer: We sent our Sunday-school birthday offering to the Hooker School in Mexico. Will you tell us something about it?

Missionary: The Hooker School was founded fifty years ago by Mrs. Josephine Hooker, the widow of a Philadelphia clergyman. Over three hundred girls attend this school.

Leaguer: Christmas will soon be here. Will you not tell us how it is usually celebrated in Mexico?

Missionary: The children in Mexico do not receive gifts on Christmas Eve as you do. They have a pageant which they play. In this two children represent inn-keepers, and two others represent Mary and Joseph. Mary carries a large doll to represent the Child Jesus. For eight nights Mary and Joseph ask to be taken into the Inn; but each night the inn-keepers refuse to admit them. On the ninth night, which is Christmas Eve, the Inn-keepers open the doors of the inn and welcome Mary and Joseph. On Epiphany night, before the children go to bed, they put their shoes outside on the porch. During the night the three Wise Men ride through the town on white horses. The next morning, each child finds in his shoe a bag of candy and a toy.

Leaguer: Do all the Mexican children celebrate Christmas the same way?

Missionary: No, there are many children in Mexico who live far away from the schools and do not know how to read or write. They have never heard about our Lord and the many wonderful things that He has done. That is why we should put as many dimes and nickels in our mite-boxes during Lent, and in the red side of our envelopes at other times, so that more teachers may go to Mexico to teach all the little children.

News From the Field.

The Y. P. S. L. of the Diocese of Louisiana has just published Vol. 1, Number 1, of The Canon in November. It is a most creditable and readable paper and their official publication. It is a mimeographed four-page sheet with space given to Provincial as well as Diocesan News.

The Kentucky Y. P. S. L. has just had its diocesan convention in October and seem to have had a wonderful time of it. In order to get news items in these columns they have to be in the hands of the Editor before the first of the preceding month. We are sorry that this seems a little stale.

South Florida had her convention on the Friday and Saturday after Thanksgiving Day. It was held at Fort Pierce and they had a good bunch from all over the diocese. We are soon to have an account of the way they do things there. At the Synod of the Province of Sewanee their President, Gordon Tucker, gave a stirring address about what is going on in their section.

We have been a little slow in getting our news in from the field, but hope that from now on we may have a great deal of it.

One of the biggest problems for the Young People has always been that of Programs. It is this need that this page has tried to meet. So that we are delighted to be able to add the following announcement from the Y. P. S. L. of the Province of Sewanee:

"An outstanding aid in the program building for young people's organizations has just been published by the Young People's Service League of the Province of Sewanee. The book published primarily for the parochial leagues in the Province of Sewanee, contains a vast amount of program material and program outlines adaptable to all organizations of young people within our Church.

"It contains programs and program material on such topics as: The Forward Movement, The Four Ideals, Worship, Service, Study, Fellowship, Thank Offering, The Sewanee Movement, War and Peace, Personal Evangelism, and various topics on the Bible, the customs of the Church, Church organization, and many others.

"An eighty-page printed book, attractively bound; it is indeed a very decided step forward in fulfilling the need for better programs. One copy of the book is being sent gratis to each parochial league in the province. Additional copies are available from: Marshall Seifert, 112 Houston Street, Mobile, Alabama. The price is 35 cents postpaid."

Youth.

Youth is not a time of life. It is a state of mind. It is not a matter of ripe cheeks, and supple knees; it is a temper of the will, a quality of the imagination, a vigor of emotion. It is a freshness of the deep springs of life. Youth means temperamental predominance of courage over timidity, the appetite of adventure over the life of ease. This often exists in one of fifty, rather than one of twenty.

Worry, doubt, self-distrust, fear and despair—in these are the long, long years that bow the heart and turn the cringing spirit back to dust.

You are as young as your faith, as old as your doubt—as young as your self-confidence, as old as your despair.

In the mental plane of your heart is an evergreen tree: its name is Love. As long as it flourishes you are young; when it dies you are old. In the central place of your heart is a wireless station: as long as it receives messages of beauty, hope, cheer, grandeur, courage and power, from the earth, from men and from the Infinite, so long are you young. When the wires are down and all the central places of your heart are covered with the snows of cynicism and the ices of pessimism, then are you grown old—even at twenty—and may God help your soul!

BOOK REVIEWS

PLANNING THE GOOD LIFE: By Henry H. Sweets. Art Paper. Pp. 273. Published by The Presbyterian Committee of Publication, Richmond, Va. Price, 50 cents.

All good things must be planned. The life of the Christian, pre-eminently. We fail in our spiritual culture in the lack of a systematic purpose, linked to a definite schedule.

The author takes a world view and leaving the telescope of long distances, takes his microscope for the inspection of the inner things of our being. While he disclaims any intention to indite a theological compendium, a careful reading of his book satisfies that he has given us the strong meat of the truth.

One thing warms our hearts. We in this column are constantly claiming that social regeneration, so widely trumpeted in the past, is now being questioned. Our author stands back of us when he quotes James Truslow Adams: "If there is to be a regeneration of the national character, it can come about only by the regeneration of each of us as individuals." So our author himself: "The new social order is to be made up of individuals whose hearts God has touched." Certainly, this is the old and tried method of our fathers, and to them was found good. It will be so with us when we have gotten over our novelty of hoping to convert men in blocks. That never has been done and never will be done.

Generous quotations, numerous Scriptural references, fine and suggestive illustrations enrich this most commendable contribution to the problem of our perplexing life. It will make God real and vital to us. K. M.

THE ONE AND THE MANY, A Brief Calvinistic Contribution on the American Social Problems. By R. J. Banhof. Art Paper. Pp. 31. Published by The Wm. B. Eerdmans Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Price, 25 cents.

As may be inferred by the title, the author is discussing our past individualism, which enabled one per cent of the population to win for itself the bulk of the wealth of the nation. We all know, to be sure, that the day for such a situation is forever past. In the solution of our economic problem, somehow a more equitable distribution of our resources must be reached. Just how is the question the author attempts to set before us.

Few of our readers are aware that John Calvin was more than a reformer in religion. He was a statesman, probing deeply into things of the life that now is. And the author has ably presented John Calvin's ideal. He concludes this thought-provoking address, given before a Federation, with the admission that the solution lies somewhere in the future, but that until the principles of Calvin are admitted there can be none. He declares that the Townsend Plan and Huey Long's "Share the Wealth" program are not attainable in the present status; and his figures are convicting.

When he insists, "Your way as Calvinists points to Christ and to God. It is He who shall finally establish a Calvinistic Kingdom of God, where the individual shall have perfect liberty, and where the fulness of social life with others will be based entirely upon the fraternal principles of Christ Jesus, King of Kings," he does not provide that there shall reside on the part of humanity the disposition to accede to this purpose. "We will not have this man to reign over us" is as proudly acclaimed today as when our Lord first pronounced the sentence. Society must be regenerated. This is what Edward Bellamy discovered with a heart-ache. The rapacity of human nature will not come to terms with fine ideals. It is in for all it can get, regardless of the other fellow.

The book is well worthwhile; and should be read.

I AM A CHRISTIAN: By Jesse R. Wilson, Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement. Art Paper: Pp. 64. Published by The Student Volunteer Movement, 254 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Price, 25 cents.

A thoughtful analysis of the witness of the believer to the faith of the Christian religion. This is a corrective of the common attitude which ignores the doctrinal and exalts the ethical in the Christian confession. Truly, there can be no Christian conduct which is not founded upon Christian assurance. A good life, patterned upon the recorded life of our Lord; high ideals stimulated by His exalted teachings, are excellent in their way, but they do not meet the demand of the Word of God. Faith comes first, and preeminently faith in a Person which grows into the like passion of the Apostle, who could soulfully declare, "For me to live is Christ."

In confirmation of this postulate, the author quotes Dr. William Douglas Mackenzie, in his recent volume, "The Christ of the Christian Faith": "It required the Cross and the Resurrection and Pentecost to confirm and illumine their (the apostles) faith in Him." And we may add a bit of exegesis by our Lord Himself: "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed, etc." Mark, He reverses their mental concept. He cannot be Master, Teacher, Guide, until He shall become their sovereign Lord. And that exalted relation to them is by the way of the Cross.

A well worthwhile book. K. M.

STONEWALL JACKSON'S FLANK MOVEMENT AND GUINEY'S STATION: By Virginia Carmichael. Price, 25 cents. Pp. 9. For Sale by Charles Carmichael, Fredericksburg, Va.

It is a wonderful thing when we have the closing scene of a great and good man's life brought before us in such simple truth, that it may indeed be a "Vade mecum" on life's highway. This, we have in this small booklet. The author's familiarity with the battle area around and about Fredericksburg makes those personages and battles in the great drama of life and death enacted on those fields so many years ago seem only yesterday.

The little booklet is most timely, as it may be a Christmas remembrance, not an ordinary card, something we like to keep and read again. L. H. S.

THE MAN WHO SAID HE WOULD: By William Edward Biederwolf, D. D. Cloth. Pp. 163. Published by William B. Eerdmans, Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan. Price, $1.

Here is another book by an author quite well known to the readers of the Southern Churchman. And its very titles are intriguing. The first of this collection of thought-provoking and inspiring sermons, gives the volume its significance.

The man who said he would, but wouldn't. Who can guess his name? The man who said he would but couldn't. The man who said he would and didn't. The man who said he would and did. These are all Scriptural characters.

The book is pungent with apt illustrations and pointed suggestions. It will make a fine Christmas gift for some liberal layman to give his pastor. A good, wholesome dollar's worth of sermon stuff. And a fine body of readable and profitable matter for us all. Get it. It will be a lasting friend.

he child who never knew
The grandmother kind and true
Has missed a boon in life
That softens many a strife.

Let's see her as she sat
With her knitting in her lap,
While many a baby sock
Was added to her stock.

With sweetest smile and eyes so bright,
She greeted all with pure delight,
As at her side they told each woe,
And comfort got before theyd go.

Her blessings on each little head
When it was time to go to bed,
Oh! who has not such memory dear
Has missed through life a God-sent cheer.

Mass Education in China.

China is a huge aggregation of people, just now badly disorganized, plagued with famines, floods, war lords, ignorance, poverty and disease, not to mention Japan's aggressive policy of denomination. But a group of Chinese educators, under the leadership of Dr. James Yen, are experimenting on a program of mass education and a study of rural life, in the hope of evolving a technique which will apply to the whole of China. Youth between the ages of fourteen and twenty-five are the ones selected by Dr. Yen; they are the "strategic section of the Chinese population," he says. China has some 70,000,000 of these who have never had an opportunity for any schooling; hence the mass education movement, which began in the Hopei province and is now spreading to other districts. Ting Hsien's 200 people's school have graduated around 25,000 young men and women who, in turn, either continue their studies or unite for community service. Dr. Yen has worked out a system of writing, known as the "Thousand Character Syster", which is taught to all groups, regardless of the dialect they use. Started in 1922, the mass education movement by 1929 is said to have taught a total of 5,000,000 students ranging from ten years to sixty. Dr. Yen, educated in America and led into this work by his experience with the coolies during the World War, said: "We have always talked in China about our huge population. But what are the facts? Most of these people are blind, deaf and dumb. They are blind because they cannot read, deaf because unawakened intellectually, dumb because inarticulate. In this day and generation people of that kind cannot survive and will not be permitted to survive unless something is done to raise the general standard of living. It is not the lack of intelligence, but the mental ignorance of the masses, that we have to try to overcome." China's educational status does not differ in kind from that of other countries—only in the enormous number of illiterates. With all peoples the race seems to be between literacy and world chaos.—Christian Advocate.

Peace an International Venture.

War is a failure, not a triumph, of government. It is a waste of national wealth; so far from securing peace, it defeats every influence that makes for the world settlement and world agreement. The Western Hemisphere may imagine that it can keep out of a European war, but when the war is over, with all its destruction of life and civilization, then there will be smokeless factories in the Western Hemisphere; there will be grain rotting in its fields, because the people who were to command labor and use the labor of America will be lying rotting corpses under the ruins of the destroyed buildings of the cities of the East. War benefits nobody, therefore the British Government and every enlightened government in the world have declared that they will do their best to make war unthinkable and an impossibility. But I must say this by way of warning—no one country can secure peace. Peace is an international venture. Great Britain cannot disarm whilst other countries are arming. Great Britain cannot trust to security of peace and cooperation and good will whilst other countries are pursuing an opposite policy in an opposite spirit. Therefore the question of Geneva is this, Do we trust each other enough? Are we going to pursue our problems in the spirit of good will and with the determination to cooperate in order to secure peace rather than to arm against each other?—Ramsay Macdonald, Former British Prime Minister.

The Bible in England.

Years ago I saw a copy of a painting entitled, "The Secret of England's Greatness". I do not recall the name of the artist. Perhaps it was Barker. I do not suppose that it was a great painting from an artistic point of view, but it contained a great spiritual ideal. The painting represented an old African chief coming all the way from Africa to ask Queen Victoria the secret of England's greatness. In the painting the old chief is standing in the presence of the queen asking the question, and the queen is replying by placing a copy of the Bible in his hands. The Bible was the secret of England's greatness.

I was reminded of that picture very frequently this summer as we traveled through England. On every hand one sees reminders of what the Bible has meant to England in the past. I recall some of these. Let us begin a thousand years ago. We saw a number of monuments and memorials to King Alfred the Great who reigned more than a thousand years ago. These memorials reminded us of the fact that good King Alfred had the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer and some of the Psalms translated into the language of the people. They also reminded us of his purpose to lay the great teachings of the Holy Scriptures at the very foundation of his kingdom.

We pass over several centuries. John Wycliffe, who died a hundred years before Martin Luther was born, was called "the Morning Star of the Reformation". In his day the services of the church were in Latin and the Latin translation of the Bible, known as the Vulgate, with the authorized Bible of the Roman Catholic Church which in Wycliffe's day dominated England. John Wycliffe resolved in his heart that the people of England should have the Bible in their own language, and proceeded to make a translation of it from the Latin into the English of his day. He came near paying for it with his life, but a friend at the royal court helped to give him protection. However, years after he died his bones were digged up by the authorities and burned and the ashes thrown into the River Avon, which ran near his home. A quaint old writer made this prophecy:

The Avon to the Severn runs,
The Severn to the sea;
And Wycliffe's dust shall spread abroad,
Wide as the waters be.

In numbers of places we saw memorials to Wycliffe. Perhaps the most striking one was a large mural painting in the corridor of the House of Parliament representing mothers reading Wycliffe's Bible to their children, although they did it at the peril of their lives. Thus England honors Wycliffe for the great work he did in helping to put the Bible into the language of the people.

More than a century after Wycliffe died William Tyndale was raised up of the Lord to do more than any other man ever did to put the Bible into the language of the English people. When he announced his purpose to translate the Bible he was warned that he would thereby displease the Pope of Rome and the other authorities. He replied: "I defy the Pope of Rome. If God spares my life I will make it so that the boy who drives the plow in England will know more of the Bible than the Pope of Rome." With this immortal reply he proceeded with his work, but he soon found it necessary to flee for his life and take up his residence in what is now known as Belgium. By this time the printing press had been invented by Gutenburg of Mainz. So Tyndale toiled away at his translation in Belgium, published the New Testament in English and sent it back to England. As fast as the copies arrived they were gathered up by the authorities and burned in front of St. Paul's Cathedral in London. Spies were put on Tyndale's trail. At length, he was arrested and burned at the stake.

One afternoon, as I was walking through a beautiful garden along the banks of the Thames in London, I unexpectedly came across a striking monument to Tyndale with a life-size statue of him on top of it. On the monument was this inscription: "William Tyndale, First Translator of the New Testament into English from the Greek. Died a martyr at Vilvorde in Belgium, A. D. 1536. The last words of William Tyndale were: 'Lord, open the king of England's eyes.' Within a year afterwards a Bible was placed in every parish church by the king's command." The king was the notorious Henry VIII, who helped to hound Tyndale to death for translating the Bible into English, and then a year later ordered a copy of the Bible, which was a slight revision of Tyndale's Bible, put into every church in England. Tyndale's dying prayer was answered more speedily than he could have even hoped for.

By this beautiful monument, and many other memorials, England has honored the name of Tyndale, who is the father of our English Bible. We speak of our version which is most in use as King James' Version of the Bible. It is a revision of Tyndale's translation. At least 80 per cent of Tyndale's words and phrases were retained by King James' translators.—Dr. Walter L. Lingle in Christian Observer.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

Monica Williams.

And who is this man, half dead on the road,
Stripped of his raiment, wounded of thieves;
A Priest and a Levite have chanced this way,
But lo, he is not known of these.

Nay, they have not known he who hath lain
On the Jericho Road, all bleeding and torn;
For on the far side, they did'st walk in disdain,
Leaving this traveler, unhelped and forlorn.

But a certain Samaritan cometh this way,
Oh wait! with compassion he draweth near,
He hath bound up his wounds, with wine and oil poured,
And him to the tavern, his own beast will bear.

Is he a friend, who hath known his ill,
And hath sought for this traveler to help in his need,
Oh no, just a stranger who too hath passed by,
But God in His love hath such mercies decreed.

Yet, all strangers are friends, if God is within,
For loving, God speaks from the heart to each one,
And bids us turn back from the door of dispair,
And do unto others as to us we'd have done.

And if always we follow this way of God's love,
And lovingly leave all care at His feet,
From out of the darkness, the sorrow, the gloom,
"A neighbor"—through God, will our every need meet.

The Birds' Symphony Orchestra.

To the birds—master music-makers of Nature—the man-made orchestra is indebted; for on visiting woodland haunts the music lovers hears, not a series of aimless trills and twitterings, as some folk classify bird-song, but a symphonic program sounding forth the tonal qualities of the strings, woodwinds, brasses and the percussion instruments so well known in orchestral circles.

Beginning with the string division of a Bird Symphony, it will be discovered that many members belong to this group; among the most important are the silver-toned wood-thrush, and the higher-pitched Baltimore oriole—these two birds, with their expressive notes, belong in the first violin section. The mezzo parts of the second violins are supplied by the call of the quail, and the rippling tremolo of the house wren.

The soft, sweet scorings of the bluebird and the tranquil tones of the hermit thrush, first cousin to the wood, well demonstrate the voices of the viola and the 'cello. This "hermit" member of the string-group sings a many-syllabled song, which is yodel-like in structure: "uoli-a-e-o-li--lo-lee-lee!"

In the wind instrument section, the scintillating music of the nightingale possesses such flute-like qualities as to be called the flautist of the wood-winds. Being a bird universally loved by musicians, his elaborate trillings have been given place in many music scores of the masters; and from the day of the French composer, Francois Couperin (1668-1733), who featured the bird in one of his "Suites", and who wrote in the score margin, "This nightingale cannot succeed better than on the flute", down to the present time, musical successors have profited by Couperin's suggestion, with the result that flutes and nightingales have become musically inseparable.

Continuing the list of wood-winds, the vivacious-voiced song-sparrow, the highest-pitched singer of Nature, supplies the modulations of the piccolo, in turn the shrillest-toned instrument of the true orchestra. Then, the redbird's "chee-o, chee-o, chee-o" is a brilliant imitation of the likewise high-pitched life.

In pleasing contrast is the pensive note of the peewee. Long-drawn-out as it is, the tone possesses oboe-like qualities, the burden of the melody being the paraphrased version of the dusky-coated performer's own name: "pee-a-wee, pee-apeer!"

The English horn has its liquid-like tones sounded in the lyric cooings of the dove; while the clarinet, with its varying register, is well represented by the "kong-quer-ree" of the red-winged blackbird. According to Emerson, "The blackbirds make the maples ring, with social cheer and jubilee".

The scorings of the brasses are suggested by the tuba-toned gutteral hootings of the "who's who" bird, as some one has humorously called the owl; and the weird voice of the raven brings out still more somber qualities of the instrument in question. The mellow notes of the French-horns are sounded by the clear-toned purple martin. The plaintive parts being supplied by the whip-poorwill.

From the barnyard comes the trombone player, the same being none other than the humble hen; and her prosaic cackle, on ascending scale—"co-co-co-co-day-ee"—rings out with all the sliding intonations of the trombone. The more strident-voiced trumpet-calls are sounded by the saucy bluejay, who though not counted a very popular orchestral member, is, nevertheless, an insistent performer! Closely associated with the trumpet is the cornet, and here the robin's penetrating crescendo takes the lead of the instrument as named. This same robin redbreast has been called the "bird of the morning", and his dominating song carries with it the freshness of dawn.

The last section of the orchestra—the percussion group—is not crowded with performers, yet there are some outstanding "battery" members worthy of honorable mention. On first hearing the noisy "ker-ruck, ker-r-ruch" of the red-crested woodpecker reminds one of the click of castinets, but professionally speaking the "pecker" is a drummer, and on a resounding tree trunk he taps his rhythmic tattoo.

The diatonic cuckoo, whose tones are subject to major and minor changes without notice, may be called the xylophonist of the symphony. Of all the feathered musicians, the notes of this bird have seemingly been the most frequently imitated by composers. An examination of musical literature from the time of the famous old English folk-song, "Sumer is icumen in, lhoud sing cuccu", dating from about 1250 down through the centuries, the cuckoo's call has been given most ingenious featuring by Bach, Beethoven, Mahler and countless other composers of musical consequence.

No orchestral personnel is complete without the conductor, a leader acquainted with the entire instrumentation of his orchestra, and in Birdlands' Symphonic Organization the versatile mocking-bird serves in this important capacity. All the notes of the forest-symphony are his to utter; and if one member of the Bird Orchestra falls out of line in musical phrasing, trust the "mocker" to correct the scoring with a faultlessly sung measure of melody!—Alethea Bonner in Our Dumb Animals.

What Could It Be?

"Mamma," said Billy, "what do you want for Christmas?"

"Dear me," said Billy's mamma, "I don't know of a single thing I want."

"But you must want things," said Billy. "You must. It's a sort of game. It doesn't matter whether you really want the things or not."

"Oh, I didn't understand," said mamma, entering into the game. "Well, then, let me see. I should like a diamond pin."

"And what else?" said Billy. "You must want more."

"I want a long sealskin coat."

"Say something else—say lots of things."

"I want a new motor, and a lace collar, and some curtains for baby's room."

"Mamma," said Billy, coming to her side and speaking earnestly, 'don't you want a card like that one I painted this morning?"

"Oh, dear, yes," said mamma, quickly. "I should love to have a beautiful card like those you paint."

Billy went to the window and looked out at the snow and the sparrows, hopping on the walk which ran down to the street.

After a minute or two he came to mamma's side again. "Mamma," he said, very solemnly, "I won't say which, 'cause I don't want to spoil your surprise, but one of those things you told me you want you're surely going to get for Christmas."

Mamma leaned over and kissed the bright little face, and said softly: "I do wonder which it will be."—Exchange.

Polly's Christmas Present.

It was the close of the autumn term and Miss Rollens, the teacher of Grade Seven, was leaving and would not be back after the Christmas holidays.

"If only I could give her a real present," sighed Polly Moll for the twentieth time. "She's the very nicest teacher we've ever had, and I did so want to give her a specially nice gift. All the others are going to, mother. Evelyn Avers has bought the prettiest ivory toilet set, and Thelma is going to get her an old lace collar, and Billy's mother said he could give her a six-volume set of books, and I," she ended a trifle bitterly. "I'm going to give her a twenty-five-cent handkerchief! Oh, mother, sometimes I just hate being poor."

There was a suspicion of tears in Polly's eyes, in spite of the fact that she was eleven years old and in the seventh grade at school. She hastily brushed them away, then continued, "Mother, wouldn't you hate to give an old white handkerchief if it were you"?

Mrs. Moll carefully put down the sewing on which she had been working.

"I dare say I would, at your age, Polly dear," she replied. "Especially if I loved my teacher as much as you love Miss Rollens. Are you sure you can't give her anything else? How much money have you?"

"Thirty cents"—the words came out almost spitefully—"and I've saved and saved—ever since we heard she wasn't coming back. But that's every bit I could collect."

"What would you like to give her, child?"

"Oh"—Polly's eyes grew large—"if I had the money, there's the loveliest snapshot album down at Carter's—two and a half. But"— and the light faded

—"there's no use, mumsey, I can't do it."

"No," her mother acquiesced soberly. "No, we can't, Polly. I often wish I could give you more spending money, dear, but sewing doesn't pay very well, and I thank God every night that He gives us enough for comforts and necessities. I am sorry that you can't always do as the other girls do, and it makes me feel badly to deprive you of any little pleasure."

Polly was all contrition immediately. "Oh, you dear, dear mumsey! What do I care if I can't give as much as the others, when you have to work so hard for the money?" and Polly swept down on the figure in the rocker with an impetuous bear hug. "I'm just a naughty, ungrateful girl to be complaining. And Miss Rollens is so sweet, I know she'll be just as nice as can be about the handkerchief." Despite her efforts, there was a break in the voice. "After all, a handkerchief is a nice, useful present—and—and—"

Mrs. Moll smiled in spite of herself. "Perhaps we can think of something else you can get," she suggested.

"I don't believe so—for thirty cents," said Polly, but she looked up hopefully as her mother settled back in the rocker, a pre-occupied expression in her eyes.

"You said you would like to give her a snapshot album" she asked.

Polly nodded.

"Well, of course, we can't afford the nice, large one; but I wonder. Why couldn't you buy one of those pretty little fifteen-cent albums they have at the five-and-ten-cent store?"

Polly's face was a protest.

"Oh, mother, she'd know I'd only paid—"

"But we wouldn't give it to her empty," Mrs. Moll hastened to say. "Do you still have all those snapshots that were taken on your school hikes.

"Yes," Polly answered wonderingly.

"Well, fifteen cents for the book, ten cents for some paste, and five cents for one of those white lead pencils," her mother went on calculatingly. "Just thirty cents. How about that, Polly?"

"Why—why, I don't understand."

Mrs. Moll laughed.

"Just this—get all your pictures together, sort them chronologically, and paste them in the album. Under each make a notation—the date, some little remark. Perhaps you can remember something funny that happened. Didn't you say you have a picture of Thelma when she fell on the ice, and said: 'Where are my feet?' Put that down. Then, where Billy tied his trained goat to the wheelbarrow and took that Christmas box to school. How about 'A Modern Santa Claus'?"

A light was beginning to shine in Polly's eyes.

"Oh, and that picture of me taken at camp when our class was up there last summer. I was hanging to the tree by one hand, and Grace's little dog was underneath, and it looked just as if he had chased me up there. I could call that 'Treed', couldn't I? And that picture of Miss Rollens and Grace, when their sled turned over! And Evelyn as a goblin at our Hallowe'en party. You know Mr. Avers took several flashlight pictures that evening, and I've got two of each. And there's one of Miss Rollens and all our class."

"Which might be fine for the first page," suggested Mrs. Moll.

"Yes," Polly nodded, "and for the very, very last page, I'm going to put one of me."

"And you might write, 'To my beloved teacher, from', substituting the picture for your name."

"The very thing!" Polly laughed. "Now I must run and get the pictures.

"Just see, mumsey"—a few minutes later—"aren't there a lot?"

"About enough to fill one of those little albums, I should judge. Now, if you like, you may look them over, and put them in the proper order for pasting."

Presently Polly laughed.

"Look at this funny one, mamma, where we're dressed as little Dutch girls in that play, 'The Holland Lass'. I'd almost forgotten all about it. And here's the picture Grace took of us on Remembrance Day. I can call that 'All of us—the seventh-grade class'."

Polly worked industriously, and soon the snapshots lay in a neat little pile, and that afternoon, after she had returned from town, she pasted them in a pretty little brown album.

The last day of school dawned bright and sunny, as December days have a habit of doing, and the teacher's desk in Room 7 was piled high with tissue-wrapped parcels. There was an air of excitement evident among the pupils as Miss Rollens called the class to order, distributed the report cards, collected text-books and set the room in order generally. Then she turned smilingly toward her desk, and the class broke into spontaneous applause.

One by one the teacher opened the packages, and every one exclaimed over their contents. Polly watched with dancing eyes. There was the exquisite ivory toilet set which Evelyn had brought; Billy's beautifully bound volumes also; a silk umbrella—ever so many other lovely presents. Finally came Polly's gift.

"Why—why—" Miss Rollens glanced at it a moment. "Come here, everybody. Let's look at this together," she said, and the class circled around her desk as she slowly turned the leaves. There were exclamations and remarks.

"Oh, isn't that the cleverest thing? Look at this picture of Grace. Oh, Miss Rollens, do you remember the time we went on that sleigh-ride? Wasn't it fun? Don't you wish we could go again? Polly, whatever made you think of this? Why, it's the very best of all!"

And when Miss Rollens had turned the last page, she put an arm around Polly.

"It's just the sweetest present, Polly dear," she said, and there was such a soft light in her eyes. "I'll always, always keep it, and whenever I look at this little book, it will bring back this happy year, and all the good times that we've had together." Then she said something which Polly never forgot. "Always remember, class, it isn't the cost of a present that counts; it's the love that stands behind it."—Adapted from Junior Life.

One Tick at a Time.

The grandfather's clock had been faithfully telling time for many, many years. Suddenly one day it stopped. There was an investigation of the works and the trouble was located in the second hand.

"Well, it's this way," replied the second hand. "Too much is expected of me. Just think how much ticking I have to do! Every minute I must tick sixty times, and I've been doing this for at least thirty years. If you don't believe that I have ticked millions of times, count it up yourself. I am supposed to go on ticking millions of more ticks. I tell you it's too much. I'm not equal to it. I quit!"

The rest of the works in the old clock were at a loss to know what to do. If the second hand refused to do his bit the whole works were held up. At last the wise old hour hand said to the second hand: "Do you feel able to tick just once?"

"Oh, yes, I can easily do that," answered the second hand.

"Well, just tick once, then again, and again. That is all there is to it. You never need to tick more than once at a time." And by the time the hour hand had finished the second hand was ticking cheerfully again, a tick at a time, and the old clock was running along as usual.

Sometimes we behave like that foolish little second hand. We stop and pity ourselves about our tasks instead of going right on doing them, bit by bit, and when we do this we sometimes hold up the whole works, which certainly is not fair. The things required of us may look big, but we shall never be obliged to do all of them at once. All we ever need to do is one bit at a time and we can cheerfully agree to do that.—Christian Science Monitor.

WONDERLAND.

I used to think my A B C
About as stupid as could be.
And standing by itself alone
It isn't much, I can but own.
But let me tell you this: I think
When alphabets are mixed with ink
And letters plain are mixed up so
They tell a story, then you know
The alphabet is truly grand—
A very splendid wonderland.
And Father says, no story yet
Was writ without the alphabet.
And more than that, none can e'er be
That is not in our A B C:
And all it needs, he says, to make
A story fine, that's sure to take,
Is one who's keen enough to see
How to arrange our A B C,
So that they'll follow in a way
To make the story plain as day.

THE BOOK OF BOOKS.

Within this ample volume lies
The mystery of mysteries.
Happiest they of human race
To whom their God has given grace
To read, to fear, to hope, to pray,
To lift the latch, to force the way
But better had they ne'er been born
That read to doubt or read to scorn.

For the Southern Churchman.

THE ARTIST.

Mary S. Brooke.

There is an artist, humble, praised by none,
Who creates beauty with such wondrous skill
That those beholding it with rapture thrill.
Fairer than pictured face or carven stone,
Not with the sculptor's chisel is it done,
Nor painter's brush, or poet's magic quill.
Nay, none of these such dream can e'er fulfill.
Devoid of tools he labors, and alone.

This artist toils in a darkened room;
He may not see the wonder he has wrought;
'Tis piteous that he will never guess
The miracle he works within the gloom,
This softened radiance out of darkness brought,
This pearl—a symbol of all loveliness.

A Pilgrimage.

"If it is true that conduct shapes our faith, it is also true that faith shapes our conduct. If all our hopes and heroisms are but fireflies dancing a tragic moment over a dark uncomprehending marsh, if our love amid the forces of the universe is like a child caught in a stampede of wild horses, we shall find our life shaped and mocked by that creed. But if the core of reality is like Christ and Calvary, our life of tears and tenderness might well become a pilgrimage toward Home."—Dr. George A. Buttrick.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETING DECEMBER 10, 11, 12, ASKS PRAYERS OF THE CHURCH.

Again the Church is asked to offer intercessions for the guidance of its National Council, meeting on December 10, 11 and 12, at Church Missions House in New York.

As determined at the last meeting, two major subjects for discussion will be, first, the relation of the Church's young people to the Council, especially in regard to the Church's mission, and second, some plans and suggestions for promoting the Church's work, which the Council asked the Rev. Dr. Reinheimer, executive secretary of the Council's Field Department, to present. As previously announced, the following special committee has been studying the matter of the young people's relationship to the Council: Bishop Juhan, Miss Eva D. Corey, the Rev. Ernest E. Piper, the Rev. W. Brooke Stabler and Mr. Charles Wood.

ALMIGHTY GOD, whose wisdom has enlightened and whose will has ruled Thy Church, grant to the National Council the guidance of Thy Holy Spirit that in all things it may seek the welfare of Thy Kingdom and the glory of Thy Name.

ALMIGHTY FATHER, who dost order all things in heaven and earth, grant to us the grace and guidance of Thy Holy Spirit. Especially we pray for Thy Church and its National Council, that with wisdom, faith and courage it may go forward in service. May the light of Thine eternal purpose shine upon our onward path, directing our steps, controlling our wills, and inspiring all our efforts, to Thy glory and to the upbuilding of Thy Kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

DR. FRANKLIN'S SCHEDULE IN THE ORIENT.

Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, National Council Treasurer now in the Orient on business connected with financial difficulties affecting the China mission, writing from Shanghai October 28, reported a good trip so far. He had a day in Tokyo and found that St. Luke's Hospital even surpassed his expectations. From Shanghai he was able to visit Zangzok, Wusih and Soochow, places that interested him immensely as centers of real Chinese life, less affected by foreign influence than the port cities. Leaving Shanghai, he was going on to Peiping, Hankow, Kuling, Anking, Wuhu, and Nanking. Everyone has been extremely cordial and his chief difficulty is to find enough sleep.

By his present schedule, he left China for Manila November 19, leaves Manila December 4, returning to Japan; arrives in Kobe December 12, leaves Yokohama January 3, arrives in Honolulu the tenth, leaves the twentieth and arrives in New York January 29, in time to prepare his official report on the financial problems for the National Council's meeting in February.

"VOCATION," THEME OF RETREAT AT GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The Rev. Charles Lewis Gomph, S. T. D., rector of Grace Church, Newark, conducted the annual Day of Devotion for the students of the General Theological Seminary Tuesday, December 3. The retreat began Monday evening, included a series of meditation addresses by Dr. Gomph on Tuesday, and closed with the celebration of the Holy Communion Wednesday morning. All classes at the Seminary were suspended.

Preparations for the Day of Devotion began two weeks ago with the division of the entire student body into eight groups, each led by a professor, each of which met twice to discuss the theme of the retreat, "Vocation".

ANGLICAN SOCIETY HOLDS SERVICE, FOLLOWED BY MEETING.

The Anglican Society held a special service of the Holy Communion in the Chapel of St. Ambrose in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York City, on Thursday, November 21. The rite and ceremonial used were those of the Anglican Use in strict accordance with the Book of Common Prayer. The celebrant was the Rev. Professor Henry R. Gummey, Jr., D. D., of the Philadelphia Divinity School. The purpose of the service was to demonstrate the ceremonial accompaniments of a simple celebration of the Holy Communion loyal to the Prayer Book and traditions of the Anglican Communion.

After the service a joint meeting of the Executive Committee and the Committee on Extension was held in the Dean's office in the Old Synod House, presided over by the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, D. D., Bishop of Albany. Plans for the publication of a booklet of "Notes on a Simple Celebration of the Holy Communion" were discussed, together with a later booklet of "Directions for the Celebration of the Holy Communion by the three Sacred Ministers." As comparatively few of our parishes have a sufficiently large clerical staff to conduct the latter kind of service, it was felt that the former booklet would meet a greater need and should be issued first. Plans were also made for the Society's annual meeting to be held in New York in January.

BISHOP ROWE'S FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED AT SAME ALTAR OF HIS CONSECRATION.

Coincidence of time and place enabled the Rt. Rev. Peter Trimble Rowe, missionary bishop of Alaska, to celebrate the fortieth anniversary of his consecration at the same altar before which that event took place. On St. Andrew's Day, 1895, a Saturday, he was consecrated in St. George's Church, New York City. He was the celebrant at a service there on St. Andrew's Day, 1935. Ten days earlier, on November 20, he had his seventy-ninth birthday. Among many friends attending the anniversary service at St. George's were Bishop Jenkins of Nevada, who for eight years was one of Bishop Rowe's missionaries in Alaska; the Rev. Dr. John W. Chapman, who preceded Bishop Rowe in Alaska by nearly ten years and served there until 1930; Dr. John W. Wood, who, as national secretary for missions, has known Bishop Rowe for more than thirty years; Carl J. Fleischman, business manager in the National Council's Publicity Department, who was confirmed by Bishop Rowe in Fairbanks, Alaska; and many other friends of long standing.

On the following Sunday afternoon, December 1, the Bishop of New York held a service at the Cathedral of St. John in recognition of Bishop Rowe. Two gifts were presented which had been kept from Bishop Rowe's previous knowledge; one was a book of remembrance containing the signatures of the missionaries in Alaska, and the other was a pectoral cross on a chain made of nuggets of Alaska gold. Bishop Manning made the presentation on behalf of Bishop Bentley and the Alaska staff.

The Bishop's Career Full of Romance and Peril.

Bishop Rowe's career embraces all the romance and peril of the Arctic Country during the past generation. In the forty years of his Episcopate he has traveled almost constantly over the 600,000 miles embraced in his territorial jurisdiction. In winter he has "mushed" on snowshoes behind dog teams, and has covered in this fashion approximately one hundred thousand miles, sleeping in native villages and often out in the open, buried for warmth beneath snow heaps. In summer weather he has covered many more thousands of miles along the territorial rivers in his famous launch, the "Pelican".

Progress has always been the watchword of the Bishop. Six years ago he said farewell to such old-fashioned gadgets as snowshoes, sledges and launches, and took to the air. He was one of the first missionaries in Alaska to make use of the airplane, which is snow, winter and summer, his favorite vehicle of travel over the territory. He is also a radio fan, and will tell enthusiastically how he sits in the Far North, amidst a waste of snow and ice, and alternately on the same night tunes in for concerts on Broadway, New York, doings of various sorts in Japan and Australia.

A pioneer in air travel, Bishop Rowe has likewise been in the advance guard in all the Alaskan movements of the past thirty-five years, which have made history. He took part in the first gold rush into the Klondike country and has participated in all the other famous "yellow panics" in the Territory. But while his mushing mates were digging gold, Bishop Rowe built churches, schools, hospitals. He never carried an ounce of gold out of all the fields in which he prospected.

There is no more familiar or beloved figure in all Alaska, and probably no living man is more familiar with its terrain and history. Stefansson and other Arctic explorers have known him, loved him and written about him. Rowe and Jack London mushed many a weary mile together through the wilds behind huskies, while the famous author was gathering material for his short stories and novels. The late Tex Rickard was a devoted admirer of Bishop Rowe, who on many occasions preached in Rickard's gambling place at Nome; and on such occasions Tex stopped all games while the service was being conducted. Rex Beach made Bishop Rowe one of the lovable characters in a novel based on his experience with the missionary in the Far North. Rover men, prospectors, trappers, storekeepers, lumberjacks, whalers, natives are all sworn friends of the Bishop who, gentle, soft-spoken, devout, has gone sturdily on his way through forty years, preaching the Gospel with earnestness and fervor, but always with human, practical sympathy for his fellows in whatever conditions he encountered them.

NORTH TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. E. C. Seaman, D. D., Missionary Bishop.

Former Rectors Visit St. Mark's, San Antonio.

On Sunday, November 3, two of the former rectors of St. Mark's Church, San Antonio, visited the parish. The Rt. Rev. S. Arthur Huston, D. D., Bishop of Olympia, rector of St. Mark's, 1920-

1925, preached to a congregation which taxed the capacity of the church at 11 o'clock, and in the evening the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, D. D., Bishop of Delaware and President of the National Council, rector of St. Mark's, 1911-1916, preached to a throng of parishioners and devoted friends of the city.

On Friday, November 8, the Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens, D. D., Bishop of Los Angeles, rector of St. Mark's, 1917-1920, officiated at the service of Holy Communion and addressed a large congregation. The Rt. Rev. Frank A. Juhan, D. D., Bishop of Florida, former choir boy and Church School student of St. Mark's, also visited the parish and officiated at a service of baptism.

Bishop Oldham Speaks on Peace in San Antonio Parish.

On Sunday, November 10, the Rt. Rev. C. Ashton Oldham, D. D., Bishop of Albany, preached a sermon on international peace to a large congregation in San Antonio. In the congregation were many army officers and representatives of civic organizations. Bishop Oldham, in his sermon, painted a black picture for the world if the United States did not uphold the League of Nations in its sanctions against warring nations. He said that all nations, through self interest as well as duty, should lend their moral support to the league against what the Bishop termed as "the madman, Mussolini". He further stated that the United States could not make laws to destroy war, nor could it hope to continue in isolation, but by cooperation with other nations economically and morally, peace could be maintained. Quoting from a sentence in a declarations of the Lambeth Conference, he said, "War is incompatible with the teachings and examples of Christ."

News from the Diocese.

The Rt. Rev. Walter Mitchell, D. D., Bishop of Arizona, was a special speaker at the Regional Conference conducted by the Field Department of the diocese at Alice, on November 10, 11. Congregations participating in this Conference were Corpus Christi, Kingsville, Alice. This was the eighth of a series of conferences held throughout the Diocese of West Texas under the direction of the Rev. Arthur R. McKinstry, chairman of the Field Department.

Bishop Mitchell spoke on the missionary work of the Church and the personal responsibility of the Christian to meet the opportunities for extending Christ's Kingdom today. The Rev. William C. Munds, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Corpus Christi, chairman of the Department of Religious Education, conducted a round table discussion on the subject of Church Schools. Mrs. R. E. Megee, Mrs. J. H. Moore, Mrs. George Judson, Mrs. Walter Godart conducted a Conference on Women's Work in the Church.

MISSISSIPPI.

Rt. Rev. Theodore DuBose Bratton, D. D., Bishop.

St. Andrew's Church Filled to Hear Bishop Hobson.

A large and enthusiastic crowd filled St. Andrew's, Jackson, November 14, to hear Bishop Hobson. He spoke for almost two hours without weariness to himself or to the people present. Several laymen and clergy spoke also.

Meetings of Northern and Southern Convocation.

The Northern Convocation held its best meeting in years at Indianola October 24, 25. A sermon on "Preaching and the Forward Movement", by Rev. R. E. MacBlaine, of Clarksdale, and the closing sermon, by Rev. W. L. Botkin, of Greenwood, were the outstanding featurers. Reports on the Forward Movement were made by the clergy and delegates. The Rev. D. M. Gray was dean, the Rev. W. S. Cain host.

The Southern Convocation at Bolton and the Coast one at Pass Christian also reported stress on the Forward Movement.

Rev. R. E. MacBlain, of Clarksdale; Rev. W. L. Botkin, of Greenwood, and Rev. C. G Hamilton, of Aberdeen, have had much of the Forward reading published and commented on in their local paper. The Rev. Holly Wells, of Laurel, inspired an editorial on the subject in the local daily.

Rev. Mr. Walters has moved into the new rectory at Tupelo, built by the local people with the generous assistance of the Diocese of San Joaquin.

An interesting article by Rev. A. T. Mollegan, of this diocese, and who has contributed to the Southern Churchman, appeared in the new magazine, "Radical Religion".

St. Paul's, Corinth, has more than doubled its membership through the coming of several Virginia families of churchmen to Pickwick Dam.

The choir of the Okolona Industrial School made a trip to Meridian, Jackson, Laurel, Indianola and other churches. They were well received.

The Church of St. James the Less, Scarsdale, N. Y., recently presented the Okolona Industrial School with a cross and eucharistic candlesticks made by the mission at Dante, Va.

MISSOURI

Rt. Rev. William Scarlett, D. D., Bishop.

Trinity Church, St. Louis, Moves.

Trinity Church, formerly on Washington Avenue, above Grand, has moved and is now worshipping in the property of the Church of the Redeemer. The Rev. Stephen F. Bayne, Jr., is the rector. After the resignation of the Rev. Sumner Walters, to accept a call to Alameda, California, the congregation of the Church of the Redeemer voted to disband and give the property to the diocese. The diocese in turn made possible the use of the building by Trinity Church.

Bishop Sturtevant of Fond du Lac was the preacher at a service of dedication for Trinity Church, now at Euclid and Washington, the evening of November 10.

Girls' Friendly Society.

The Girls' Friendly Society, of which Mrs. Hugh H. C. Weed and Mrs. Arthur Doig are Diocesan President and Secretary, respectively, is the only organization catering exclusively to girls in the Episcopal Church.

In this diocese there are twenty-five groups, meeting in fifteen different parishes. The total membership is 468, including candidates for the society. Each branch elects its own officers, and is a self-governing club. There are one or more older women who assist in planning the activities and act as leaders in each group. These are called active associates. The meetings of the organization include worship, craft work, social service, recreation and fellowship.

One of the recent activities of the Society was a "Round the World Trip," the object of which was to raise money for the G. F. S. mission—paying the salary of a social service worker in China. Twelve branches participated. Starting off at St. Peter's, the party took a steamer leaving New York, the trip touching England at Trinity Church, France at the Church of the Holy Apostles, China at St. Michael's and St. George's, returning to America by way of Hollywood at St. Augustine's.

Each summer about one hundred girls attend a G. F. S. Camp. Last July this was held very successfully at Camp Huldina.

LONG ISLAND.

Rt. Rev. E. M. Stires, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. J. I. B. Larned, Suffragan.
Rt. Rev. F. W. Creighton, S. T. D., Suffragan.

Bishop Stires' Tenth Anniversary.

Churchmen in Long Island, and Churchmen in St. Thomas' Parish in Manhattan, have vied with others in paying a tribute of affection and esteem to the Rt. Rev. Ernest Milmore Stires, D. D., Bishop of Long Island since November 24, 1925. The two programs make up a notable list of commemorations of his tenth anniversary in the episcopate.

On Sunday, November 24, the exact date of the anniversary, Bishop Stires celebrated Holy Communion at seven-thirty in the Cathedral of the Incarnation, at Garden City, and at eleven o'clock preached there to a large congregation. In the evening of the same day, a special service was held at the Church of the Messiah and Incarnation, Brooklyn, of which the Rev. Frederick M. Adams is rector. Several hundred people were present, including about forty of the clergy of the diocese. The service was read by the Rev. J. Clarence Jones, D. D., senior presbyter of this diocese, and the lesson by the Rev. Wallace J. Gardner, vicar of the Chapel of the Intercession, Manhattan, who, as a member of the Convention of Long Island in May, 1925, offered the name of Dr. Stires in nomination for the coadjutor bishopric of Long Island. The preacher was the Rt. Rev. Charles K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of New York, who paid tribute to Bishop Stires from the point of view of those who had been associated with him during his twenty-five years in that diocese, and who lost him ten years ago to Long Island.

A dinner was given at the Garden City Hotel, under the auspices of the Church Club of the Diocese, at which Bishop and Mrs. Stires were guests of honor. About three hundred and fifty attended. The Bishop and Mrs. Stires received the guests before the dinner, and acknowledged the congratulations and thanksgivings of their many friends. At the dinner Frank Gulden, President of the Church Club, was toastmaster. Federal Judge Mortimer W. Byers, warden of the Church of the Messiah and Incarnation, made an address on behalf of the laity; and the Rev. Frederick L. Barry, rector of St. Gabriel's Church, Hollis, first priest ordained by Bishop Stires, spoke on behalf of the clergy, and presented a check for two thousand dollars for the Bishop's discretionary fund, the gift of many friends. Mr. Gulden presented a bouquet of roses to Mrs. Stires. Bishop Stires' reply was quite characteristic. Modestly disclaiming any large share of credit for the accomplishments of the past decade, he expressed his satisfaction and gratitude for the cordial and unanimous support that had been given him in the diocese. Seeing more to be accomplished than had yet been done, he was greatly encouraged by the expressions that had come to him from every quarter, and hoped that in years to come God's blessing would be felt as in the past.

Bishop Stires' former parishioners, the congregation of St. Thomas' Church, Manhattan, on Sunday, November 17, dedicated a new window in their beautiful church in commemoration of the Bishop's tenth anniversary, and on November 16, the Bishop and Mrs. Stires were the guests at a dinner party at the Hotel Plaza, New York City.

Action Against Washington Prayer Dismissed.

The Appellate Division on November 22, dismissed the suit brought by the Freethinkers of America against Trinity Church, New York City, for damages, as the ground that the card issued by St. Paul's Chapel, which includes Washington's Prayer is not genuine. They also demanded the removal of a brass tablet containing the prayer from the wall above the Washington Pew in St. Paul's. They asked $5,000 punitive damages. This is the second time the suit has been dismissed by the courts. Counsel for the church asked to have the case thrown out on the ground that the source of the prayer, Washington's Letter to the Governors, was given, hence there was no attempt to deceive, and also that the Freethinkers have no rights in the case.

Recent Mission Makes Definite Spiritual Impress.

As part of The Forward Movement, St. Paul's Church, Englewood, the Rev. James A. Mitchell, rector, held an eight-day preaching and teaching Mission in mid-November. The Missioner was the Very Rev. John M. McGann, D. D., Honorary Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Springfield, Mass. One unique feature of the Mission was a series of open discussions for groups of varying character in the parish and community. One evening, for example, was devoted to: "Christianity and Social Work," all the social workers, doctors, nurses and Junior League volunteers in the community receiving special invitations. On another evening the topic was: "Christianity and Married Life" and the meeting was preceded by supper parties throughout the parish to which the young married people were invited. Despite inclement weather and many conflicting meetings in the busy suburban city, it was felt that the Mission made a definite spiritual impress upon the parish, linking it with The Forward Movement throughout the Church.

SPRINGFIELD.

Rt. Rev. John C. White, D. D. Bishop.

St. Paul's Church, Alton, Celebrates Centennial.

St. Paul's Church, Alton, celebrated its one hundredth anniversary by an octave of spiritual and social activities, beginning Sunday, November 17, and closing Sunday, November 24.

Owing to illness the Rt. Rev. John Chanler White, D. D., Bishop of Springfield, was unable to be present on November 17, so the sermon was preached by the rector, the Rev. Robert Hall Atchison, D. D., who was also the celebrant at the Service of the Holy Communion.

The church bells of the various churches in the city were rung in honor of the occasion, St. Paul's being the oldest religious body in the city, the building, where the congregation still worships, having been erected in 1833. Among the distinguished members of the church a hundred years ago was Mr. Owen Lovejoy, Lay Reader, and Elijah P. Lovejoy, the martyr to free speech and free press.

On Monday night, November 18, a banquet was served and a very entertaining program prepared. The chief guest speaker was the Rt. Rev. Robert Nelson Spencer, D. D., Bishop of West Missouri, who gave a most inspiring address on "One Hundred Years of Service."

Daily Eucharists were held in the church and the Octave of Celebration was closed with a largely attended service on Sunday, November 24, at which the sermon was preached by the Rev. Frederick D. Butler, D. D., former rector of the parish, for whom a reception was tendered by the rector of the parish the evening before.

This historical church has now entered another hundred years of service. Two years ago more than $30,000 was raised with which to make repairs and replacements to the interior of the church. It is now one of the most attractive as well as one of the most historical places in the nation.

Houston Minister Retires.

The Rev. Thomas Jefferson Windham, rector-emeritus of the Church of the Good Shepherd (Clemens Memorial), Houston, Texas, retired from his active ministry on Tuesday, November 26, his sixty-eighth birthday, after a rich and fruitful ministry of thirty-three years, all of which was spent in the Diocese of Texas.

Mr. Windham is well known to all of the people in Houston, having for years borne the title of Houston's "Marrying and Burying Parson". He is known and loved by thousands both in and out of the Episcopal Church; Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Episcopalians alike seeking his counsel, advice, and spiritual ministrations in joy and in sorrow.

He began his ministry in Austin, where he was Chaplain to the late Bishop Kinsolving. In 1904 he became rector of Trinity Church, Houston, where he served until 1909. He then became assistant rector at Christ Church, Houston, under the Rev. Peter Grey Sears, being placed in charge of St. John's Mission, Eastwood, Houston, and Clemens Memorial Chapel of the Good Shepherd. When the former mission became part of Eastwood's Church of the Redeemer, Mr. Windham confined his activities to Clemens Memorial, remaining as assistant at Christ Church, of which Clemens Memorial remained a mission until 1929. Mr. Windham then became the first rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, the official name under which the new parish was received into the diocese. Because of a serious illness in the spring of 1933, he had to resign his rectorship there. Upon recovering sufficiently to do active work again, Mr. Windham became associate minister at Trintiy Church, Houston, serving only occasionally. In September of this present year his old parish, the Church of the Good Shepherd, honored him in electing him rector-emeritus, which office he now holds

First Diocesan Conference Held in Williamson.

Seven Layman's Leagues of the Diocese sent sixty representatives to the first Diocesan Conference in Williamson, W. Va., November 2 and 3. Speakers to the two-day meeting were the Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider; R. P. Holland, Logan; Thomas Foulk, Wheeling; W. G. Peterkin, Parkersburg. A number of Men's Clubs in the diocese are to be organized into Leagues before the next conference to be held at Jackson's Mills, W. Va., June, 1936, at which time a Diocesan Branch of the League will be organized.

Educational Programs for the Advent Season.

The Board of Religious Education, the Rev. J. H. A. Bomberger, Wheeling, chairman, has recently published sketches of the Church's work in four diocesan missionary centers to be used as educational programs for the Advent Offering. These sketches will be included in a later publication which will give a survey of the entire missionary work of the diocese.

The present sketches include accounts of the work at St. Andrew's Mission, Jefferson County; "The Pines" at Berkeley Springs; Oak Hill Mission Field, Fayette, Wyoming, and Raleigh Counties; Associated Missions, including Hopemont Sanatorium, Grafton, and Elkins.

Loyalty Day Held at Christ Church, Roanoke.

Another one of those pre-eminently shining days that illumine ever and anon the pages of our Church histories, was the portion of Christ Church, Roanoke, Sunday, November 17.

The occasion was the celebration of Loyalty Sunday, plans for which had been formulated by the enthusiastic and tireless rector, the Rev. J. F. Wren Feild.

Entering into the spirit of the day, communicants thronged each service that was held, indicating not only their allegiance to their Church, but their willingness to aid the rector in expanding the ministry of the Christ.

The crowning service of the day was that of confirmation, which took place at 8 P. M., when a class of twenty-nine was presented and received the profoundly spiritual and graciously human charge delivered by Bishop Jett. This was the second class confirmed since the spring and made a total of fifty-three.

Following the confirmation service, there was held a Friendship or Reunion hour, in the Parish House, where the large congregation mingled and helped receive all those who have become communicants of Christ Church during the Rev. Mr. Feild's rectorate of two and a half years. They numbered 121. This affair was sponsored by the Woman's Service League, and its President, Miss Blanch Deal, aided the rector and Mrs. Feild, Bishop and Mrs. Jett, in receiving the guests. Light refreshments were served and final reports of the annual Every Member Canvass were made by the chairman of the Layman's League. It was a day long to be remembered.

Archbishop Temple's Broadcast December 8.

Much interest centers in the coming visit of Archbishop William Temple, D. D., Primate of England, who will preach on December 8 in Washington Cathedral at 10 A. M. His sermon will be broadcast throughout the nation. He will also conduct a conference for a group of clergy at the College of Preachers December 9-14. Bishop Temple is one of England's foremost scholars and is also noted for his activities in the interest of social and economic improvement in England.

At the recent conference of selected leaders on the literature of the Forward Movement, held at the College of Preachers, three sub-committees were appointed to provide literature in 1936. They were: Committee on Material for Booklets, Gilbert Symonds, chairman; On Tracts, Father Wm. Hoffman, S. S. J. E., chairman; On Cooperating With the Clergy, Malcolm S. Taylor, chairman.

The thirty-third anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. C. Ernest Smith, D. D., was recently celebrated at St. Thomas' Church. When Dr. Smith went to St. Thomas, there was a debt of $72,000. Today there is an endowment of $130,000 and no debt. A rectory and parish house and other improvements have been added under Dr. Smith, who became rector in 1902.

A total of 121 confirmations were recorded during Bishop Freeman's eight-day visit to Southern Maryland, which is incoroprated in the Diocese of Washington. Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop

Bishop Hobson Will Attend Clergy and Layman Conference.

In connection with the Forward Movement, which reports a re-awakening of the spiritual life of its more than 1,360,000 communicant members of the Church, Bishop Taitt has called an All-Day Conference of the more than 300 clergy to meet in Philadelphia on Wednesday, December 11.

In addition to the clergy of the diocese, invitations have been extended by Bishop Taitt to the Rt. Rev. Philip Cook, Bishop of Delaware, and the clergy of the Delaware diocese to take part in the Clergy Conference.

Following the All-Day Conference, on that same night, a dinner and Conference for Laymen will be given in the ball room of the Penn Athletic Club, under the auspices of the Church Club, an organization of prominent laymen, with the Bishop and the Diocesan Commission on the Forward Movement cooperating.

The Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, Bishop of Southern Ohio, and Chairman of the General Convention Forward Movement Commission, is coming to Philadelphia to conduct the Clergy Conference and will also be the principal speaker at the Dinner and Conference for Laymen.

In his official Call for the Clergy Conference issued to all the clergy, Bishop Taitt says in part:

"Bishop Hobson is giving us this day out of his very busy life so that he might set before us this great project and to tell us what is also being done in various other Dioceses and in individual Parishes. It is asked that every clergyman in the Diocese give his entire day to this Conference so that he may get a clearer understanding of the Forward Movement. Opportunity will be given for questions and discussions."

Bishop Hobson is the youngest Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States. The General Convention Forward Movement Commission, which he heads, is not only carrying on its work in this country, but is extending it to Hawaii, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, Cuba, and the Canal Zone, and its influence is reaching into Canada. It is a Movement that is concerned entirely with a re-awakening and a re-vitalizing of the spiritual life of the whole Church and is in no way related to money or finances.

Bishop Hobson was born in Denver, Colorado, May 10, 1891. He is a graduate of Yale in the Class of 1914, and was manager of the Yale crew. While a student at the Episcopal Theological Seminary in 1916 and following the declaration of war by the United States, he enlisted in the R. O. T. C., at Fort Riley, Kansas, where he was commissioned Captain and assigned as Regimental Adjutant in the 356th Infantry. Later he was promoted to Major and was in command of the Third Battalion when his regiment was sent overseas. He was twice wounded at St. Mihiel and at Thiaucourt was gassed. He returned to duty in time to take part in the latter part of the Meuse-Argonne engagement. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for bravery at St. Mihiel. On his return to America he resumed his theological studies at Cambridge.

Following his ordination and after a brief service as assistant at St. John's, Waterbury, Conn., he became rector of All Saints' Church, Worcester, Mass. During his rectorship the Sunday school developed from 100 to 700 members. There was an increase of 50 per cent in membership of the church, a debt the parish had been carrying for 50 years was paid, and the parish which had been paying less than its quota for missionary work responded with overpayment for seven years in succession. In 1930, while rector of this parish he was called to be Bishop Coadjutor of

Hymnals and Prayer Books

for

Christmas

With the approach of Christmas each parish should make provision for an ample supply of Hymnals and Prayer Books. A gift of a number of copies might be made by some generous parishioner or by groups within the parish.

In the interest of improved congregational singing, the General Convention has urged all churches to place the musical edition of the Hymnal in the hands of the congregation so far as possible.

As publishers of the authorized and approved Hymnal of the Church, as well as the Prayer Book, in behalf of the Church Pension Fund, we solicit your order.

HYMNALS

Standard Musical Edition at $1.20 per copy (or $1.00 per copy in lots of 100 or more).

Special Choir Edition, heavily reinforced, at $1.50 per copy (or $1.30 per copy in lots of 100 or more).

Word Edition in red or blue cloth at 40 cents per copy.

PRAYER BOOKS

Pew Edition, 3½x5½, in various colors, at 35 cents per copy.

Chancel Edition, 5x7½, in various colors, and with larger type, at 60 cents per copy.

MEMORIAL TO MRS. THOMAS McCORMICK.

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary of Grace Church Berryville would pay this loving tribute to the memory of MRS. NANNIE F. McCORMICK, who entered into Life Eternal on Friday, October 18, 1935:

For many years she was a faithful, devoted and valued member of the Auxiliary, interested in all departments of its work. The missionaries, especially those in the mountains, were encouraged and materially aided by her interest, gifts and prayers. Her devotion to her church and services of Divine worship, her unwavering faith in God, "that He doeth all things well"; her courage under difficulties; her ready help in time of need and sympathy with those in sorrow; and her calm, quiet strength are an inspiration and an example to us, "who are still in our pilgrimage".

"May she go from strength to strength in that Life of perfect service, and may Light Perpetual shine upon her."

Clerical Changes in Diocese of Chicago.

Two clerical changes of consequence were announced this week in Chicago. The Rev. Donald W. Crawford, priest-in-charge of St. Paul's Church, Kenwood, since the death in January of Dr. George H. Thomas, was elected rector of Trinity Church, Detroit; and the Rev. Carl E. Range, assistant at St. Mark's Church, Evanston, for the past four years, was elected rector of Christ Church, Otttawa, Ill.

Mr. Crawford takes up his new duties December 15. Trinity Church, Detroit, is one of the unique churches of that city. It was built by the late James E. Scripps and is termed an "architectural mosaic" in that it embodies what was considered the best in various architectural periods. Mr. Crawford was assistant to the late Dr. Thomas for three years. He came to Chicago from Canada where he was born and educated.

Fr. Range took up his work at Ottawa on December 1. Christ Church is one of the greybeards of the Diocese of Chicago, nearing its one hundredth anniversary. It was one of the early outposts of the Church in Illinois. Fr. Range succeeds the Rev. Hugh M. McWhorter, now pastor of Annunciation Church, Chicago.

Four New Men in Diocese of Missouri.

Four new clergymen have recently entered the Diocese of Missouri. They are: The Rev. Charles C. Wilson who comes from Garce Church, New York City, to be rector of the Church of the Holy Innocents and in charge of Mt. Calvary Church, and of our new development in St. Louis. The Rev. Kenneth E. Heim, who has been Canon of the Cathedral in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, is now rector of St. Stephen's Church, Ferguson. The Rev. Wilbur Ruggles, who has been associated with Dr. Lewis at St. John's Church, Waterbury, Connecticut, is now rector of the church in Jefferson City, which is a most strategic center. And the Rev. William Kirk, who graduated this June Southern Ohio, and on the death of Bishop Reese in October, 1931, Bishop Hobson succeeded him as Diocesan.

Missionaries, the Bishop and Department of Missions Meet Together.

Bishop Taitt and the Department of Missions in the diocese have inaugurated a new practice in connection with the meetings of this important department of the Executive Council, whereby missionaries in charge of fields of work in the six convocation districts of the diocese will meet with the Bishop and the Department and personally tell of the work in their respective fields.

This new departure had its inception December 2 in the Church House, beginning at 5 P. M. and continuing in the evening with an intermission for supper, when missionaries of the Convocation of Chester met with the Bishop, the Very Rev. Charles W. Shreiner, Dean of the Convocation, and the Missions' Department members, and together went over the entire question of missionary service in that convocation. Meetings for other convocations will be held at intervals at later selected dates.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"We must think if we are to pray."

"A man's habits," writes a well known psychologist, "should be his best friends."

In the Bible there is more that finds me than I have experienced in all other books put together.
Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

It is impossible to enslave mentally or socially a Bible reading people.
—Horace Greeley.

The proper care and consideration of even the most insignificant of living things helps mankind to a better understanding and appreciation of human rights.

Fairer Jesus, Lord,
Than all the sons of men,
Love brought Thee from on high
Enduring to the end:
Thou wilt not fail Thine own,
Firm seated on Thy Throne.
—E. T. Thompson.

Henry Drummond used to say: "Ten minutes spent in His presence every morning, aye two, if it be eye to eye and face to face, will make the whole life different."

The attitude we hold toward those who have wronged us is our spiritual thermometer. To do good to an enemy may be to lose him—as an enemy.
—Selected.

The will of God is always working in the creative development of an honest, friendly, powerful world, a world civilization, all of whose laws, customs and institutions shall be in accord with these fundamental qualities of life.
—Dr. E. I. Bosworth.

Bishop Matsui, of Tokyo, when asked what had led him from his Buddhist upbringing to Christianity, said, it was chiefly two things: the longing in his heart and soul for a life beyond; and the personality of our Lord.

In Dan. 7:14 we have these words, "All languages shall serve Him".

"There have been four hundred and forty different translations of the Bible."

You never get to the end of Christ's words. There is something in them always behind. They pass into proverbs, they pass into laws, they pass into doctrines, they pass into consolations; but they never pass away and, after all the use that is made of them, they are still not exhausted.—Dean Stanley.

A firm, quiet, joyous faith is the very foundation of the Christian life. But it is not the entire structure. There must be a strong framework to hold the building true. This is the "virtue" which must be added to faith. In the Christian life virtue should include all those qualities which mean all-round manliness.—"Today."

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

The Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D.,
281 Fourth Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Bishop Perry:

We, the undersigned Bishops of the Church, desire to present to you our respectful protest concerning the Service which was held in the Cathedral Church of the Diocese of Eau Claire on Sunday, November 17th.

At that Service, according to the Editorial in the "Living Church", issue of November 23rd, the Rt. Rev. Dr. John Torok was formally received as "a Bishop in the American Episcopal Church."

In a news article of the same issue we are informed that "by this ceremony Bishop Torok gained regular status as a Bishop in this church in good standing, but without seat or vote in the House of Bishops. He has been appointed Assistant to the Bishop of Eau Claire."

This to us is an amazing statement. You will, of course, recall that the Report of the Special Committee, which was appointed by you to investigate the matter of Dr. Torok's Consecration, and which reported at the meeting of the House of Bishops in Houston that in their judgment the Consecration was valid, though irregular, was not even received by the House. In other words, the House took no action whatever regarding the validity of the Consecration. The Bishop of Eau Claire was present and is cognizant of all this.

Furthermore, the Bishops present at Houston are aware that other serious matters concerning Dr. Torok were laid before the House, matters which apparently have been quite ignored by the Bishop of Eau Claire in the Service in his Cathedral in which he received Dr. Torok as a Bishop of the Episcopal Church "in good standing" and proceeded to appoint him as his Assistant in the Diocese of Eau Claire.

It appears to us that this procedure on the part of the Bishop of Eau Claire is in clear defiance of the action of the House of Bishops at Houston and is calculated to bring discredit upon the whole Church.

For this reason we feel bound to lay before you our respectful protest.

Faithfully yours,
(Signed) Alexander Mann,
Bishop of Pittsburgh.

The Church and Symbolism.

There is a real demand from many of our Church people for information about the symbolism used in our churches. Perhaps here the Forward Movement could be of help by having some sort of conference where men of different schools of thought might gather to make some effort to explain to people what the various symbols they use from week to week stand for. It would have to be a comprehensive work if it were to be accepted by the Church as a whole.

Many of our Church people, in the newer parts of the country particularly, have come to us from some different background than the old Episcopalian background. They are interested in this subject and the wild stretches of imagination that certain of our clergy use to illustrate individualistic ideas of symbolism are almost laughable. The result is that a good many people are puzzled.

And then much of the explanation is not only individualistic, it is also of a type that cannot be said to represent the Church as a whole. Appeal is made always to that which existed in some Latin country. Have we worked out no symbolism of our own? Hasn't England symbolically written much in the Church that will be of interest to English speaking people? Have we nothing to contribute to symbolism from America?

St. Thomas' Church, New York, that beautiful modern thirteenth century style, demonstrated symbolically what a modern "old" church should be. Its symbolism is the symbolism of the men and women who built it. Tourists have laughed at the dollar signs said to be imbedded in the carving, and it has proved a source of interest to those who visited, to see automobiles placed on miserere seats. But it is symbolism that is understood by modern people in modern times, and as such, is worth while, for its lessons are vivid and real.

There is a symbolism in the marriage service. Young people love to have the service explained to them, and today, when the Church asks the clergy to "instruct" those who are to be married, it would be a fine thing if the rector had some good symbolism that would show those, being married, that religiously, they are entering a real blessed state approved by God.

In the meantime we have to depend upon a few well intentioned men who for the most part have little authority for what they say. There are only a few rare chapters in a few books on the whole subject, and yet, it is through the eye as well as through the ear that education can come.

We suggest the formation of a study group to take up the whole subject. Let the group be comprehensive, however!

A Suggestion for Christmas.

Why not send a religious paper to your friend for a Christmas present? It has all the appeal of a secular magazine in the fact that once a week for the whole year your gift presents itself and it adds to the thought of the Christmas greetings that it is a yearly blessing that you wish to send.

We are so self-conscious about our religion. At times we explain by a general trite saying that we Anglo-Saxons like to keep such things to ourselves. But why, in the effort to take some of the commercialism out of the Christmas season can we not show that there is no Christmas aside from the religious idea, and why (we ask this question often), do not our Episcopalians support their church press?

Quite possibly we all have some friends who never suspect that our friendship could be enriched by anything except that which we daily say and do in ordinary ways. Such friendships might be strengthened, if friends realized that we had a religion we would like to share.

Of course that nephew and god-son or god-daughter will smile when, away at college, they receive a copy of The Southern Churchman. They will even joke about the pious uncle, aunt or friend who sends it to them and make some bright saying to their friends. But that is just to cover up the Anglo-Saxon embarrassment, and in their hearts they will feel glad that you think enough of them to want them to be interested in eternal things.

That Word Forward.

Let us be careful how we use the word "Forward" in our various church activities. While we do think that a part of anything forward should be the teaching of real stewardship to those who do not know the use of money, it would be a sad mistake to mix the Forward Movement up with a financial campaign.

We recently heard of one church which had a "Forward Campaign." As a matter of fact it was what professional money raisers call a "dead horse campaign" for it was to pay off an old indebtedness and there was little forward looking on the part of anybody. In that parish The Forward Movement will never mean anything except the paying off of an inflated old debt.

Cynics are already saying, "Well we have seen these things come and go and this is just another way to raise the budget." So we must be prepared to make the Forward Movement what it is supposed to be—a spiritual adventure.

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

"Father, Forgive Them!"

The Churchman, December 1, 1935.

Why should the fact that an Episcopal clergyman takes seriously Jesus' teaching on forgiveness make first page news in the twentieth century daily press? It's an interesting subject for speculation. Is it because forgiveness, though it has been talked about for the past two thousand years, has so rarely been practiced in such harassing situations? The pulpit is often admonished, "Practice what you preach." That is what the Rev. Dr. Benjamin F. Root of St. Simon's Church, Chicago, was doing, when he pleaded that the girl who killed his son might be forgiven. Astonished at the nation-wide expression of bewilderment, he said to his questioners, "How can a Christian do otherwise? It is as natural as the sunrise or the smile of a little child." Yes; as natural to any real Christian. But how many are there who fall into that category? "I have been asked by messages and telegrams from one end of the country to the other," he said, "to state the why and wherefore of my 'forgiveness'. It is just this: We say in the Apostles' Creed that we believe in the 'forgiveness of sins,' and so do I—because I hope that I have the Lord Jesus in my heart. He said: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do'." Unaccountable as it may seem, Dr. Root has given the nation one of the most startling demonstrations of faith in practice that it has witnessed.

Why Not a Parliamentary Christian Group?

The Church of England Newspaper, November 22, 1935.

As usual a large number of the new M. P.'s are ardent Churchmen. I am sorry that it is impossible in the space to mention them all. I hope the day is not far distant when there will be in the House of Commons an active Christian group representing all denominations and parties who will resolutely and openly be prepared to speak and vote on Christian lines.

During recent years Sir Samuel Hoare, the Foreign Secretary, has not been actively engaged in Church affairs. He was a member of the old House of Laymen before the days of the Church Assembly, and is a devout Churchman.

Sir John Haslam, who was re-elected for his native town of Bolton, is a stalwart Lancashire Churchman and he is a member of the Church Assembly, though he does not often speak.

It is difficult to estimate what the Church Assembly owes to Sir John Birchall, who has represented Leeds since 1918. He has been a member of the Assembly since its foundation and he was one of the pioneers who laboured to secure the Enabling Act.

Mr. George Lansbury, who was re-elected for Poplar, has during recent months been in the public eye owing to his speeches on Peace and his appeal to the Church to take steps to prevent the war between Italy and Abyssinia. For many years he has been an earnest Churchman, full of fire and zeal and is affectionately known as "Uncle George".

As I anticipated, Viscount Wolmer had no difficulty in defeating his Labour opponent who appeared at the eleventh hour. He is on various Church Assembly Committees and he is especially interested in the relations of the Church and State.

The Attorney-General, Sir Thomas Inskip, is one of the best known evangelical Churchmen. He always strikes a high note at the Assembly.

Sir Francis Fremantle is not only Member for St. Albans; he is also one of the St. Albans Diocesan representatives in the House of Laity. He is a son of the late Dean of Ripon and occasionally preaches at services for medical men.

Rye has been faithful to Sir George Courthope. He is a member of the Church Assembly and is an Ecclesiastical Commissioner (unpaid).

Some people were afraid that Lord Hugh Cecil might be defeated at Oxford University, but his hold on the electorate is far too firm for that. I need not say anything about his ecclesiastical activities, which are many sided. The Standing Orders of the Church Assembly are largely his creation and he is frequently called upon to decide points of order.

Inexplicable Russia.

Church of England Newspaper, November 22, 1935.

In the current issue of The Friend of Missions, the Rev. F. J. Miles continues the account of his experiences in Russia, where he has toured extensively on behalf of the Russian Missionary Society. We give brief extracts.

"Who shall generalize on the conditions in this vast territory?" says Mr. Miles. White Russians, Little Russians, Georgians, Tartars, Caucasians, Don Cossacks, Mongolians, etc.; Muslems and Christians; Greek Orthodox, Roman Catholics, Old Believers, Molokans, Baptists, Evangelical Believers, Seventh Day Adventists, Pentecostalists, Jews, etc.; all with their differing characteristics. Russia opening her Eastern windows to pagan and heathen influence (with millions of women wearing the veil of Islam) and in return sending out her influence over her Eastern borders till approximately one hundred million Chinese are Communistic and under Soviet government. Russia with her Western doors admitting the civilization of Christendom. Russia—the most backward of all so-called Christian nations—yet borrowing all that is best from other lands, copying and producing within her own borders the patented products of the world's most brilliant brains. Russia—with the most ignortant and backward peasantry in the world and the largest farms on the earth's surface, with the latest and greatest mechanized methods applied to agriculture.

New Year's Eve at St. Paul's.

Church of England Newspaper, November 22, 1935.

The Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's are making arrangements to observe New Year's Eve in a way calculated to win the approval of multitudes of people.

Community singing will be conducted from the steps of the Western entrance until 11:45 P. M., and will conclude with "Abide with me."

"At that time," writes the Dean, "the service in the Cathedral will begin, and will be amplified to the assembly outside and broadcast throughout the country. It will be necessary, in order to avoid the danger of crushing, to confine entrance to the Cathedral to ticket holders, who will enter by the north and south doors only. The tickets will be given to any applicant. I am sure that those who have been accustomed to 'see the New Year in' outside St. Paul's will welcome our attempt to strike a new note."

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

The Spiritual Basis of Christian Unity

Christian Unity is essential to the safety of civilization, and its long continued delay has created a perilous situation. This delay is due to the mistake of supposing that it can be brought about merely by a process of intellectual agreement. Whereas the real bedrock foundation of Christian Unity is a spiritual rather than an intellectual one. Christ Himself made this clear, when, on the night before His Death, He gave to His disciples His New Commandment:—"A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another, as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

The Church the Family of God.

Christ came to this earth to create a Christian family with God as our Father and ourselves as His children. The Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man are necessarily implied in the revelation which Christ gave to the world. The acceptance of Christian Brotherhood is an essential preliminary to organic Unity. If so-called Christian bodies and nations are not willing to accept Christ's New Commandment as the essential basis of their relationship one to another, any intellectual agreement that they may in time assent to, can have no permanent value, because, as St. Paul said, though we may understand all mysteries and all knowledge, yet without love it counts for nothing.

The Acid Test of 1 Cor., Chapter 13.

It is perfectly evident from the Thirteenth Chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, that Love must come first as the absolutely essential element of the Christian life, whether in the individual or in the Church as a whole. Love alone can heal the deeper wounds of the Body of Christ, and while the process of intellectual agreement, which is being so earnestly sought for at the present time, may be considerably delayed, there is no reason why all Christian bodies should not join together in a Pact of Christian Brotherhood, and thus bear witness to the world that they are all followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and are willing to work together in a united fellowship of Christian service for the good of the world. To refuse to take part in such a Brotherhood would seem to indicate an unwillingness to accept Christ's New Commandment as the crucial test of the reality of our discipleship. For as Christ Himself says:—"So shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

A Hindrance to Christianity.

One of the greatest hindrances to the spread of Christianity in the Twentieth Century, is the fact that so many professed followers of Christ entirely misrepresent Him to the world, especially in the matter of Christian Brotherhood, and therefore, instead of being attracted to Him, it is, if not actually repelled, at any rate rendered indifferent and unbelieving. It was said in the early days of the Church:—"See how these Christians love one another." And it was doubtless this witness of their obedience to Christ's command that they should love one another, which, more than anything else, won a heathen world to Christ. That ancient testimony to the most striking characteristic of the religion of Jesus Christ, could not truthfully be put forward at the present day, but if Christianity is to regain its ancient power to draw men to Him, it can only be by the clear manifestation of that first and foremost fruit of the Spirit, Love.

No Christian Unity Possible Without Love As Its Most Essential Factor.

With all due respect and admiration for the Commission on Faith and Order and the valuable work it has carried forward, it seems strange that the most essential element of Christian Unity should have been left in the background, especially when we remember St. Paul's words with regard to the sovereignty of Love among the greatest Christian virtues. Can Christian unity be achieved without it? This is a question which the Church may well ponder in these perilous times. And can Christianity without that "most excellent gift of charity," shining out as its most godlike and heavenly virtue, save civilization? Love holds its supreme place because it is Divine. God is Love. It is the essence of the Divine Unity.

The Love of God the Motive of Human Redemption.

The great work of human redemption is based upon the love of God for man, and Christ came from heaven to reveal to us that God is Love. The greatest gift which He came to impart to mankind is the privilege of sharing in that Love, and of being inspired by it, to make love the supreme motive of our lives in our relations with Him and with our fellowmen. It is the fulfilment of the Law of Love, that we become like God, and reveal to the world that we are made in His image. Love makes heaven what it is, and the life and service of the angels is the purest and most perfect embodiment of the Divine Love in creation.

Heaven on Earth.

It is evident from our Lord's Prayer, bidding us to pray:—"Thy Kingdom come. Thy Will be done on earth as it is in heaven," that heaven is the model for His Kingdom here on earth. That being so, it is clear that since Love makes heaven what it is, Love must be the ruling principle here on earth too. We must therefore give Love the foremost place in making Christianity known to men, and it cannot possibly hold this supreme place unless they see in it a Brotherhood of Christian men, bound together by the closest ties of friendly cooperation in seeking to follow Christ and to bring in His Kingdom. Organic Unity will follow in due time, but the spiritual foundation of Christian Love and Brotherhood must come first. A picture puzzle may be put together so that it may seem to be a unity in appearance, but there is no real union, for its several parts are soon separated. There must be the attraction of cohesion to make separate parts grow together, and Love alone can heal differences of thought and opinion and serve as the attraction to make men one in Christ.

Gracious Spirit, Holy Ghost,
Taught by Thee we covet most,
Of Thy gifts at Pentecost,
Holy, heavenly love.

Faith will vanish into sight;
Hope be emptied in delight;
Love in heaven will shine more bright;
Therefore give us love.

Hymn 76.

International Bonds of Good Will

By WILLIAM TEMPLE,

Archbishop of York and Primate of England.

IT IS A WONDERFUL PRIVILEGE that I should be allowed at the very outset of my visit to speak in this way to multitudes of the citizens of the United States, and I must preface what I say by an expression of gratitude for this opportunity.

I am happy to number among my personal friends many Americans, and I have paid one very short previous visit to the States. In this way I have been led to a conviction which I desire to express at the outset. For I began by making the mistake frequent among my fellow-countrymen of supposing that American and British folk are really parts of one nation who happen to have become politically separated. Those who from either side of the Atlantic start with that assumption are bound to be disappointed as the differences disclose themselves—differences of sentiment, of policy and of aspiration. Each is looking for what he does not find. For, of course, the plain fact is that history has led to the development of widely divergent types on the two sides of the Atlantic; and the way of wisdom is to assume not identity but difference. Then, if we meet each other as heirs of different and indeed divergent traditions, we shall be surprised and delighted at the perpetually fresh discovery of common elements in our tradition received from the past, and common hopes in our outlook as we prepare for the future.

The fact that we can understand each other without having recourse to any foreign language, gives us an opportunity for mutual appreciation greater than any other two nations possess. And therein at once lies part of the special service which we are called upon to render to mankind. For the way of welfare and peace is the way of mutual appreciation. Peace and good-will can never come merely through those things wherein men are all alike: These are in any case the source of agreement; and good-will that rests on these alone will not survive the irritation due to variety and difference. If peace and good-will are to be secure, it must be because the differences between us have themselves become the bonds that hold us together.

It is worthwhile to consider what are the forces that specially bring men into contact with one another across all national boundaries, and how far these are a source of friction or of harmony. The chief is commerce; and this works both ways. Commerce is one of those activities of mankind that has about it a sort of natural paradox. Its method is one that tends to obscure its true nature, for its true nature is mutual benefit. The exchange of goods should be to the benefit of both parties. In its simplest form it is, on each side of the exchange, a disposal of unwanted surplus in return for something needed; and however complicated its organization becomes, that remains its essential principle. Moreover, as far as commerce is healthy, it is beneficial to all concerned in it. But in the process of exchange each party is likely to be thinking more of his own needs than of the other's. Consequently there arises some rivalry between them: each is trying to buy cheap and to sell dear. And when the commercial system is highly complicated, and there is little personal intercourse between those who direct the two sides of an exchange—or rather, the variety of interests concerned in the exchange—all sense of partnership in a process of mutual benefit is likely to disappear, and a sense of unrelieved rivalry to take its place. The method of commerce has then obscured its true nature: men have become so absorbed in the way in which they conduct it, that they forget what it really is.

THE ANSWER to the question whether commerce promotes rivalry or good-will is the same as the answer to the question whether men are thinking most about its method or most about its nature; for its method is likely to be a source of friction, while its nature is a source of good-will.

We sometimes hear reformers say that business ought to be not competition for private profit, but cooperation for public service. That is not the wisest way of putting the matter; and Christians, more than other people, will be anxious to avoid it. For Christians will remember that the reality of anything whatever must be what that thing is in the mind of Christ. It must be as He conceived it, because He is the agent of Creation. No Christian who pauses to reflect can ever regard our Lord as one who points to visionary ideals. His is the mind which perfectly and truly apprehends Reality. That is why He can say that to follow His teaching is to build upon a rock. So it is here. Modern business often looks like a huge system—or chaos—of competition for private profit; but it never really is that; it always is cooperation for public service. It is for public service, because if no one wants the product there will be no purchasers, no purchase price, no wages and no profits. Except in so far as it serves the public, business cannot go on at all.

Similarly, business is conducted by the cooperation of multitudes of people: some supplying labour of various types, some managerial skill, some capital; and if any one of these is withdrawn, the process stops. Except so far as it is cooperative business cannot go on at all. But it could go on without any profit. It is already, always, and inevitably cooperation for public service, and it is not in its own nature competition for private profit. It always is the thing that reformers sometimes say they want it to become. It is not its own nature that is wrong, but the way we treat it. We have become so obsessed with its method as to forget its real nature.

And, of course, if you treat as competition for private profit what really is cooperation for public service, something is likely to go wrong with it. We have here an illustration of a universal principle. God is the source of all good things, economic goods as much as any others; and He means us to enjoy them to the utmost. The commerce which enables men to enjoy them more fully, is in accordance with His will; and if we treat it as what it is, a great system of cooperation for the general benefit, it will generate good will. But if we are self-centered—which is the essence of all sin—and attend chiefly to our own share or interest in it, converting it into competition for private profit, it is bound to go wrong in its own working and to promote rivalries and enmities. But this comes, not from the nature of commerce, but from our sinful way of conducting it.

It is perhaps worth while, for avoidance of misunderstanding, to point out that cooperation does not in practice exclude competition altogether; and in urging that industry and commerce should be conducted in a cooperative spirit, I am not demanding the elimination of competition. Consider any team-game. The players join in the game for the pleasure which all share; the aim is cooperative. The way in which they promote that cooperative aim is for one team to compete against the other. If the two principles can be inter-twined like that in a mere game, it is not to be supposed that a combination of them is impossible in real life. But it makes all the difference which of the two is uppermost and which, in the last resort, checks and controls the other. If the cooperative spirit is in control, you have good sportsmen who would rather be beaten in a good game than win in a walk-over; if the competitive spirit is uppermost, you have players who play to win and who will do any dirty trick that the referee will permit. It is quite easy to apply this parable to the affairs of life.

Commerce then is one of the factors that brings nations together. Whether in doing so it promotes good will or ill will depends on whether we conduct it rightly or sinfully. In fact, of course, our conduct of this, as of all other human affairs, is a mixture of rightness and sin. But there is no doubt where lies the way of remedy or salvation.

ANOTHER great international activity is Science. Here, national characteristics count for least. The progress of Science is a vast cooperative enterprise resting on those qualities of the human mind which vary least as between the different nations and races. An experiment accurately carried out and observed in a laboratory of Moscow or Berlin is valid for Paris, London or New York, unless variety of climatic conditions affect it. So far as it goes, Science generates fellowship. But it is not very potent in this, because it does not draw upon, and therefore does not harmonize, those differences of sentiment and outlook which lead to strife.

Art in its various branches is a greater power than Science. For Art does spring from nationally characteristic attitudes of mind, and is able so to present these as to illustrate their value. Shakespeare and Browning could only have appeared in England, Goethe only in Germany, Dostoievsky only in Russia; and all of us are the richer for their works. As we read these, we see each country in its characteristic excellence. We learn from the writers of other nations what we could never have learned from those of our own; all are the better for this rich variety, and we rejoice that other nations are so different from ourselves. In that mutual appreciation, the foundations of real goodwill may be laid, because the differences that tend to set us at variance are become the bond of our fellowship.

Yet even this does not touch the heart of the matter. For at bottom our differences arise from that sin or self-centredness which is characteristic of all men from birth, complicated by divergence in our standard of admiration and of judgment. There is no hope of solving many of the most difficult of our problems until at least we all agree to submit to one standard of judgment. We may fail to conform our lives to the standard which we accept. But that is a small matter and the conflicts arising from such a failure are, in principle at least, capable of adjustment. But if one admires conduct which another censures, no adjustment is possible. The world's most urgent need, now that it is welded by the scientific conquest of distance into a single community, is a single and universally accepted standard of moral judgment, by which all nations agree that their actions shall be approved or condemned.

But what possibility is there that out of the welter of diverse traditions and cultures, which men have made for themselves, any such agreement can be built up? There is no hope whatever that this chief need of our world can be met unless there is indeed a Father of all mankind, whose will includes the welfare of all His children, and who has made His character known to men—unless, in short, there is a Divine Revelation. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is offered as precisely that Revelation; and those who have made sincere trial of it have found that it vindicates its claim.

Here is the source of hope for the world in our generation as in every generation that has gone before us. It is true concerning this world, as concerning the next, that there is none other Name under heaven wherein we must be saved, but that of Jesus Christ, in whom is seen the very Nature of God, and His will for man.

I AM GLAD, therefore, that at this anxious time I am come here, not chiefly as a representative of England, not of the English branch of the Catholic Church, but as a minister of the universal Gospel and of the Catholic Church itself. We have our national characteristics; and if only we have good-will we can rejoice in all of them. But that good-will itself will not be established so securely as to survive the frictions and tensions of modern life, unless we are united in a common submission to one throne of Judgment, and seek to guide our lives by reference to that one and only purpose which embraces the welfare of all—the purpose of the love of God.

And this we cannot do for ourselves. Nothing is so surprising as man's pathetic belief that he can, by the action of his own will, determine the direction of his own life. History and experience are one long refutation of that belief; yet men obstinately cling to it. They will not admit the fact which the Christian Church calls Original Sin, or allow for its consequences. Yet the fact remains. We are born self-centred, and we cannot lift ourselves off that centre of self and reorganize our nature on some other plan. We can indeed widen the circle of which each is centre. I can escape from narrow concern for myself to concern for my family, or my nation, or even my race; but it will still be "my" something. And that is sin—the very essence of sin. For the true centre of the world is God. Unless we can really learn not only to think but to feel that we are, as it were, planets revolving about Him, we cannot exercise a right judgment. That is something we cannot attain by ourselves; all we can do is to submit ourselves to the forces which can bring about a change in us.

In other words, the supply of our most vital want is to be found through faith and worship:—faith, not as a torpid acquiescence in some theological proposition, but as practical trust in the active power and wisdom and love of a God who is ready to guide us if we seek His Spirit; and worship, not as the perfunctory repetition of some familiar words, but as the opening of heart, the submission of conscience, the surrender of will, to the holiness and love of God disclosed in Jesus Christ. As we learn in this sense to trust and to worship Him, seeking in that faith and worship the guidance of our lives, we shall both be drawn together in a fellowship of the Spirit which embraces all who trust and worship, and shall learn what is God's will for ourselves, our share in the all-embracing purpose of His love.

GOD IS VERY PATIENT. We must not expect the solution of our problems in any brief period of time; nor will it come as a whole, in a single flash; but through the slow progress of advances made step by step. In that advance, one step of great importance is to establish and maintain a mutual understanding and good-will between the great families of English-speaking nations. Our common speech will help us; our tradition, so far as it is common to us both, will help us too. But these are no more than aids. The real bond of unity, between us and between all men, is our common faith in Jesus Christ as Saviour, Lord and God, our common allegiance to Him as King.

That faith and allegiance will bring the fuller inspiration and support for our tasks on earth, exactly because they are independent of the chances and changes of mortal life. The consummation for which we hope is not the discovery of an earthly paradise by methods of sociological experiment; it is rather the eternal Kingdom of God wherein all history may find its fulfilment. Here is the permanent paradox of religion. We may be used to save the world only so far as our first thoughts are not of the world at all, but of God and His glory. We shall be the better citizens of our earthly states and of the commonwealth of nations, because our first citizenship is in Heaven. For the

The Kingdom of God and the Second Coming of Christ

III. The Kingdom of God Today

By CHARLES W. LOWRY, JR.,

Associate Professor of Systematic Divinity, Virginia Theological Seminary.

"MY KINGDOM is not of this world," says the Christ of St. John when Pilate asks him, "Art thou the King of the Jews"? (John 18:33, 36). In this assertion we have a summary of the general position of the Fourth Evangelist with regard to the Kingdom and of the transformation of primitive Christian expectation and doctrine which his Gospel represents. Always in the thought of this writer Christianity (that is, Christ and the society of His disciples or the Church) stands in opposition to the world. "I pray not for the world, but for those whom thou hast given me. . . . They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." (John 17:9, 16.) The idea of a Kingdom on earth has been abandoned and with it apparently the thought of the imminent return of Christ. There are a few indications of the persistence of the older eschatology in a refined form, but apocalyptic imagery has all but disappeared and at the center of St. John's thought stand the conceptions of the abiding presence of Christ and eternal life, which is a present possession as well as a future state. "Abide in me, and I in you" (15:4). "This is life eternal that they should know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou didst send" (17:3). "In my Father's house are many mansions . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And . . . I come again, and will receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also. And whither I go, ye know the way" (14:2-4).

In the light of such sayings the import of the declaration, "My Kingdom is not of this world," is clear. St. John means that Christ's Kingdom is an heavenly Kingdom, for which this life may be the preparation and this world the gateway. This is the meaning also of the Book of Common Prayer in phrases like "thy heavenly Kingdom" (Prayer for the whole estate of Christ's Church) and "thy everlasting Kingdom" (Thanksgiving after the Communion).

Now I believe that in our thought of the Kingdom of God today we must begin with St. John. The ultimate Kingdom is not of this world. It is transcendent, heavenly. It is an eternal order: the everlasting realm or sphere "beyond our bourne of time and space" which is the abode of God and "the inheritance of the saints in light." The Christians is, in the first instance, one who looks beyond the things that are seen, which are temporal, to the things which are unseen and eternal (2 Cor. 4:18). He desires a better country, that is, an heavenly: and he looks for the city which has the foundations, whose architect and maker is God (Hebrews 11:10, 16). He is in a sense a pilgrim, for it is plain that even at the best the spirit of a man has here no abiding place. Earthly life is, and must be, full of conflict, of difficulty, of suffering. It is a struggle, physical and moral. What is the end and point of it all?

Such a question presses. With it is linked the simple, plain fact that a man's time on the earth is very limited. A few brief years and his life is as a tale that is told. There may be those that remember the story for a time; and in a few cases it will be long and often retold. But the fact of death remains: a universal, elemental thing as real and as basic as birth. To see and face this is surely truth and wisdom not morbidity. Is it Plato who has somewhere written that philosophy is a meditation on death?

NOW ALL THIS has the most direct bearing on our subject. The Kingdom of God on earth as a goal for which we ought to strive and to bend every effort may or may not be important. My point is that it cannot be a substitute for an eternal Kingdom into which a person after the experience of this life may, if it please God, enter, to receive the appropriate consummation of his being and career here amid the things of time and sense. Modern Christianity has tended and is still tending, especially in the United States, to make such a substitution. Such a step is fatal. Christianity cannot, I believe, be static. It must change; it must keep in a living relation to its environment in every age. But if it abandons the Kingdom as heavenly, if it cuts the bonds that bind it to the eternal, it becomes another religion. Its continuity with Saints, Reformers, Fathers, Apostles, and Christ Himself is severed.

Nor does the peril of the tendency in question consist simply in the threat to the concept of personal immortality. There is also a general metaphysical aspect to the case. Let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that we give up belief in the life to come and the positing of a transcendent, eternal order. Let us assume an entire concentration on the Kingdom here, the perfect humanity on earth, the men and women that are to be. Let us assume, further, that there is a real possibility of the fulfilment of such an ideal—as the nineteenth century and many in our own day fondly thought. Let us say, somewhat more cautiously, that the Kingdom will be brought in by the year 20,000.

What then? Is the law of mortality rescinded? Is humanity everlasting? Will the earth endure forever? There is little ground for thinking so. It is science which tells us that in all probability life on this planet is transitory. It is science which describes a frightful apocalypse at the end—and apocalypse of ice and cold and frozen immobility. "We of these later days," writes Sir James Jeans,

> "living in the narrow temperate zones surrounding our sun and peering into the far future, see an ice-age of a different kind threatening us. Just as Tantalus, standing in a lake so deep that he only just escaped drowning, was yet destined to die of thirst, so it is the tragedy of our race that it is probably destined to die of cold, while the greater part of the substance of the universe remains too hot for life to obtain a footing . . . To remain a possible abode of life, our earth would need to move in ever nearer and nearer to the dying sun. Yet, science tells us that, so far from its moving inwards, inexorable dynamical laws are even now driving it ever farther away from the sun into the outer cold and darkness. And, so far as we can see, they must continue to do so until life is frozen off the earth, unless indeed some celestial collision or cataclysm intervenes to destroy life even earlier by a more speedy death . . . . Physics tells the same story as astronomy."

If scientists like Jeans are right—and the general fact or probability, not descriptive details is the important point—then "humanity is as mortal as any son of Adam. Be it a hell or a Paradise the world shall pass away, like a dream, or a cloud, or the track of a ship in the waters." Nothing will remain to show for the aeons of travail and suffering, the centuries of human Parson, Know Your Newspaper Editor!

By FREDERICK WARD KATES,

Former Newspaper Reporter, and Now Theological Student.

A PLEA for closer cooperation between clergymen and "the Fourth Estate that I represent" was recently made by one of the nation's leading publishers in a speech before the Laymen's Association of the New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Newburgh, New York.

This is news. Not parsons pleading with editors for more space for church news, but one of the foremost figures in the American press asking members of a statewide conference of laymen and clergymen to work more closely with the newspaper publishers!

Yet again it isn't news at all, but simply an appeal that calls vividly to our attention the fact that all too few parsons are aware of the staunch friends, supporters and allies they have in the publishers and editors of most American newspapers today.

The man who made the statement we refer to is Frank E. Gannett, a director of The Associated Press, probably the world's greatest news-gathering agency, and active head of nineteen daily newspapers and one magazine.

Mr. Gannett recently made news by announcing what shall happen after his death to the newspaper group he has formed. The Frank E. Gannett Newspaper Foundation, Incorporated, has been set up, of which eleven men, chiefly major Gannett executives, are directors. Profits of the Gannett newspapers will be used primarily to keep his properties alive and prosperous, on the theory that no press can be free which is not financially independent. What profits are not needed to bolster business will be devoted exclusively to philanthropic and charity work in the cities where the papers are published. In other words, a newspaper group conducted not solely for profit for its owners, but to render service in the cities the newspapers serve.

A curious thing about the Gannett papers (mostly in New York State) is that they follow no set mold, have no common editorial or typographical formula, and each is allowed to continue virtually without interference as an individual newspaper reflecting local conditions and sentiment. The only common denominator of every Gannett paper is that each aims to be clean, honest and wholesome, "a family newspaper."

WE cite all this to indicate that no belief is more erroneous than one found too commonly among the clergy that all newspaper editors and publishers are the arch-enemies of every good and fine effort toward moral improvement, increasing of religion, and supporting those values and things which every loyal, Christian American citizen enthusiastically endorses.

No Gannett newspaper, for example, accepts any liquor advertising, though such advertising is a source of ready cash income for any publisher. Mr. Gannett realizes the power of advertising which in his recent Newburgh address he described as "one of the most powerful forces in the world today." He said it can "sell ideas as well as goods and services. The liquor problem could have been solved in a decade if a tenth part of the money that has been spent to take care of the tragic, final products of the liquor traffic, both illicit and legalized, had been spent in a great nation-wide advertising campaign, making use of all the potent mediums and appeals the science and art of advertising have developed. The same is true of world peace. Indeed, a great campaign has been drafted in the interest of peace and how I regret that the millions needed to make it fully effective are not available."

There are many editors and publishers like the one we cite in this article, men willing and eager to work with the clergy in promoting the same ends the Church is bending its efforts towards.

"Let the editor have your views, register your approval or disapproval of his work," continued Mr. Gannett. "Show him how you think he can do better for his paper and for the community. Write the editor frequently."

And speaking as a former reporter on the staff of and as a correspondent for a Gannett newspaper, the writer may add that clergymen should more genuinely appreciate the frankly amazing amount of space given them and their activities by most newspapers. Instead of easily finding fault with newspapers for printing some things they must publish, if they are to be accurate and complete recorders of the day's news, clergymen would be wiser in being grateful for what the papers do for them and by showing a better disposition along the lines of furnishing news and even recommending to their congregations newspapers that are clean and wholesome.

MANY men in Orders in our Church today have served on editorial staffs and, I feel confident, will endorse the above statement, and also the fact that in the editors of most newspapers the Church has a more valuable and a truer friend than but a handful of parsons realize.

A newspaper's power for good, or for evil, is wellnigh unlimited. It is a great moral and educational force. And, believe it or not, it is almost the sole reading-matter of the majority of people in this country. No other agency reaches so many millions of people every day. What they know or think is determined for the masses by what they read in the paper that daily comes into their home. It becomes quite literally a guiding star.

Clergymen would do well, we feel most sincerely, to awaken to a keen realization of the startlingly potential power of newspapers for good, or for evil; of the fact that there are many publishers and countless editors publishing papers, great and small throughout the breadth of this country, who are eminently valuable and loyal friends of the Church; and of the fact that through the newspapers of this land the Church and the clergy have a tremendously influential and powerful ally.

Parson, know your newspaper, know your friend, its editor and its publisher. Work with your newspaper and you will find it is working with you and for you, and that it will be a great help to you.

INTERNATIONAL BONDS OF GOOD WILL.

world's chief need is not for progress, but for redemption; and its loftiest hope is not for a perfect administration of secular affairs, but for a fellowship of mankind that springs from communion with God. We shall find peace and good-will on earth only when we have learned to join in giving glory to God in the highest.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

striving and quest of the good. Such a finale represents the very acme of pessimism and is so irrational as to put a greater strain on the imagination than religious faith.

WHAT IS THE ALTERNATIVE? It is belief in in God as transcendent and the naturally related concept of His eternal or heavenly Kingdom. For what happens to our sun and planet will eventually happen to all solar systems.[1] Only if God be the creator of this world and if it lie in His power and purpose to conserve all that is good as it emerges in the temporal order, is it possible to resist the conclusion that the end of all things is a pitiless and universal doom.

But what then of the idea of the Kingdom of God on earth? Is it to be abandoned? Are we to say frankly that the concern of Christianity is not with this world at all? The answer is, No. That is to fall back into an ancient error just as we are escaping a modern fallacy. If in this article I am giving most of my space to the exposure of the latter, it is because I believe that the gravest peril of the present time is spiritual near-sightedness, not because I would revive an overweening otherworldliness.

The Kingdom is also of this world, for God is Creator and would reign here. The prayer, "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth" (Matt. 6:10), is an integral part of the Christian religion. The Christian is under an unconditional obligation so to live, so to conduct himself in all relations, that God's glory is promoted and His reign in human affairs is extended. In other words, we are to apply so far as we can, and to advocate the application of, Christ's spiritual and ethical principles to the whole of life. In such application and advocacy it is not a case of "he who runs may read" and it is well to recognize this. It is desirable to emphasize that in the endeavor after the Kingdom here intelligence is as requisite as good will, but not more so. It is necessary also to remember St. Paul's warning that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life" (2 Cor. 3:6). But the point stands that a Christian aim is to set forward the rule of God here and that the potential scope of this Kingdom is as wide as life. The economic order, education, politics or government, race relations, relations between men and women, international affairs—all are included and nothing human is excluded.

But is it not a little mad to talk of the Kingdom in connection with earth at the present time? It would be surely for the person whose only hope is in man and in the forces of this world. It is different with the Christian. His hope is in God. His faith is essentially one with that of the ancient apocalyptist: God, he believes, still lives; He is in the shadow keeping watch; He will manifest Himself in due time. And the Kingdom which the Lord has commanded us to labor for here, exists there. In the light of it we can go forward, undeterred by reverses and difficulties at home, undismayed by the gathering gloom abroad. We can take the next step and put hand to the nearest task, for we fight in the name of Christ and because of the love of God, not out of the human and rational confidence that we can build a perfect order here. So we may "live more nearly as we pray" and we may pray now and at all times, "Thy Kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth."

(Next week concluding article, "Last Things.")

[1]The theoretical foundation of this prophecy is the physical doctrine of entropy or the second law of thermo-dynamics, according to which the heat or usable energy of the universe is running down. So Jeans and Eddington. Bishops Barnes in his Gifford Lectures, Scientific Theory and Religion, says that all the experimental evidence points this way. The chief opponent of the theory is the American physicist Millikan.

BOOK REVIEWS

GUIDING INDIVIDUAL GROWTH: By Roy A. Burkhart. Cloth. Pp. 205. Published by The Abingdon Press, New York City. Price, $1.25.

With all the plans devised for the so-called "regeneration of society," we are yet confronted with the age-long method of getting society through the individual. Many are beginning to see this and admit its efficiency. Men may be enthused in blocks, mob-psychology may move a mass of humanity to action, base or worthy. But downright culture deals with the individual.

Our author tends to the psychological method of understanding and dealing with the young; and confessedly this new science does much towards solving problems once so difficult to pierce. The method in this book is admirable. The spirit of the author is commendable. The striking illustrations accurately fit the instances cited. Every mystery of the course of development seems to be brought intelligently before the student of this increasingly difficult question of personal advance into realms of culture. In brief, the question of how to deal with the man who is in unrest, as well as the young life in process of growth is herein made simple and illuminating. Pastors, Sunday-school teachers and parents will find it most suggestive. To all the fine material here given, we would add that the sincerely-sought leading of the Holy Spirit might be suggested. Many a teacher, parent, pastor or helper of the young has been able to meet these conditions, without the analytical processes herein discovered and discussed, utterly ignorant of the psychological intricacies unfolded. This is not to discredit the author; but to supplement his praiseworthy endeavor. K. M.

THE GROWTH AND STRUCTURE OF THE GOSPELS: By B. K. Rattey, S. Th., With Foreword by the Bishop of Bradford. Cloth. Pp. 112. Oxford University Press, New York, N. Y. Price, 85c.

Every rector or instructor in Biblical studies should possess this succinct treatise. It needs little more than the endorsement of the Bishop of Bradford to insure its worth.

The author departs from the usual pathway, by listing the Gospels in order: Mark; Luke; Matthew; John. The introductory chapters on The Preparation for the Gospels and The Forerunners of the Gospels; and the final chapter on The Canon of the New Testament are of distinct value apart from the body of the work.

We expect and obtain fresh perspectives in this well-wrought contribution to the ever old and yet challengingly fresh study of how the Gospels came to be and what we are to think of them in their separate and united mission. Acute criticism is not possible in this brief review. But while we may admit the author's adoption of Canon Streeter's concept of the Fourth Gospel, there is room for difference in the opinion as to the date. When we read Dr. Bacon (Yale University) in his "Jesus the Son of God," and find that this astute scholar places the writing of this Gospel within ten years of the issuance of the others, the old notion of its being produced at the end of the first century receives a mild shock. Some of us incline to Dr. Bacon's position.

However, the value of this scholarly (and from the pen of a woman) contribution is not impaired by any chronological difference of opinin. As a textbook for divinity students, a manual for the settled pastor and a volume of intriguing worth to the interested layman, it cannot be too highly praised. K. M.

CHRISTMAS. An American Annual of Christian Literature and Art. 5th Volume, 1935. 68 pages. Published by the Augsburg Publishing House, Minneapolis. Gift edition, paper cover boxed, $1.00. Library edition, cloth, $2.00.

This volume contains prose and poetry selections which will delight every member of the family. The illustrations are reproductions of well-known works of art; original photographs of winter scenes, woodcuts and pictures of the Holy Land. It is enriched by the well-chosen poems from the works of such writers as Father Tabb, Phillips Brooks, Studdert-Kennedy and others; many carols, some with their music from the northern countries of Europe and England are included. The Christmas Story as told in the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke, together with meditations on the Holy Season, combine to make this volume one which will be an ornament to any Christian Home. We would recommend it particularly for Shut-ins.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys

Emphasizing the Devotional Side of Auxiliary Work

Challenging faithfulness and claiming that there is devotional value in all the work, Helen F. Smith, Chairman of the Devotional Committee of the Honolulu Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, furnishes this stirring message on:

The Devotional Side of the Woman's Auxiliary.

"Where two or three are gathered together in My Name, there am I in the midst of them." These are the words in St. Matthew 18:20, the living words of the living Christ.

Are there any women in our parishes who say: "Oh, dear! I have an Auxiliary meeting this morning," or, "I should really go to the Guild meeting this afternoon, but I will play bridge instead," or, "Dear me, I'd love to go with you, but I suppose I must go to that Church meeting. However, I'll read my report as soon as possible and try to get away early," or "These meetings seem to get us nowhere, they are dry as dust, and I have very little in common with the women who go!" I hope no woman in this district feels that way; but do we feel that we are going into the actual presence of Jesus Christ? What if we always said in our hearts: "Tomorrow is the Auxiliary (or Guild or Altar) meeting where the Master, the living Master, will be present. It will prepare for it. I will listen to any call that comes to me for service. He has said that He is the Vine and I am a branch. I will be a thoroughly alive branch and try to realize that His life flows through my life, for the accomplishment of His purposes. I will say in my heart, 'Here am I Lord, loving Thee, longing to do Thy Will, listening to Thy Voice, in order to advance in every way Thy Kingdom upon earth'."

What power would we feeble women of Hawaii have if we held steadfast to that ideal! Jesus once chose fishermen to be His companions, to spread His Kingdom. Today He chooses you and me, common, ordinary women, with no outstanding attributes or attainments, and He makes us a part of His Auxiliary. He Himself gives each one a share, some share, if it is only to be present at the meetings, and He comes to each meeting, as He promised to do, to be "in the midst" when we gather, if only two or three, in His Name.

Numbers do not count; the place does not count; whether the tea is good or bad, does not count; whether we are naturally interesting to each other or not, does not count. What counts is that Jesus Christ is there at the meeting, that we go into His presence to ask His Will, to ask what He would have us do to forward His Kingdom! What power is there!

Our work is not limited except by ourselves. We should touch every human being with whom we come in contact, with love and tenderness and kindness, after we have been in His Presence at an Auxiliary meeting. It should be contagious, this love and power which He radiates.

Don't rush the opening and closing collects. "We Episcopalians are so reserved," we say. Well, why are we? It is nothing to be proud of. Realize His presence. "Ask and ye shall receive," He says. Bring all the Auxiliary problems to Him, they are His problems, His work which we are not able to work out by ourselves.

And let us not willingly miss meetings. We may not be here to go to meetings next year. He looks to find us in our places. Now is our chance to serve Him in some way, no matter how simple or how difficult.

And finally, let us not be over-interested in the result of our efforts. He will carry on His work long after we have gone to Him. Our part is consecration to the share which He in His love gives us. One part is no more valuable than another; a report written, a rummage sale carried through, a call made, studies arranged for, correspondence done, each duty bears the stamp of His approval, His monogram, we might say. Let each bit of work be done at His bidding, done in His name.

And so really there is no devotional side; rather, it is all devotional; a circle of devotion with Jesus Christ at the center: that is the Woman's Auxiliary.

New Missionary Education Service is Available.

Providing various lectures on missionary themes and having slides made enabling the listener to visualize people, scenes, and incidents of the lecture, is a new service now being perfected by the Department of Publicity of the National Council.

The first lecture has been prepared on the subject of Latin America, to supplement the adult study course for this year. It is now ready for delivery, since the date set for being ready was published last month as being December 15.

The nominal rental cost and the complete notes for the lecture should make it possible and desirable for many to avail themselves of this modern method of missionary education. If, as we believe, the matter of giving or sharing is retarded by lack of knowledge of conditions and needs, then this plan, developed according to the method of visual education, should furnish a solution to some pressing problems.

Visualized education can give to the Church help as great as it is giving in up-to-date educational systems. To see as well as hear the missionary work of the Church would revive or create, as they need might be, zeal for Missions.

The Department states: "We do not intend to compete with the commercial firms which produce and distribute Bible pictures, Holy Land pictures, and all the various religious subjects. We consider that visualization is particularly adaptable to education in missions, and expect to stick to that subject."

The lecture is prepared in loose leaf form with notes indicating where the slides are to be shown. It is said that if the demand warrants it, further modern methods of visual education in the missionary work of the Church will be created.

The cost is stated as being one dollar rental for each showing, plus transportation each way. Further information may be obtained from the Department at the Church Missions House.

Many People Long To Go To the Holy Land.

They would stay at the Inn in Bethlehem; they would pray in the Garden of Gethsemane; they would worship in the Tomb where the Body of Christ lay. They would be where Jesus has been. But why cross oceans to be where Jesus has been when we can be where Jesus now is? If we really believe in Christ as the Son of God, if we are really desirous of being in the presence of Jesus, then every place may become a holy place, and Jesus can and will be with us there.

The Religion of Japan

If a person makes a plain statement such as that the earth is perfectly round it is very easy to understand. The only trouble with it is, that it is not correct. So if one were to simply state that all Japanese are Buddhists it would be easy to understand but incorrect. The truth is always so difficult to grasp that it cannot be explained in a few words.

The Japanese have many different religions. Some of these are very old and others are very new. Thus it has recently been stated that several have sprung up within the past year. One such bears the name, "The Way of Man," and is said to be made up of many ideas drawn from others. It is brand new.

Among such a multitude of them, we wonder how one can try to speak at all of the Religion of Japan. But it so happens that a few years ago the Mikado, or Emperor, proclaimed that Japan had four state religions. These were: Buddhism, Confucianism, Shinto and Christianity. Of course, in this he simply passed over the smaller ones. So we shall do the same. On Confucianism we will have a program in the near future. On Buddhism we had a program in a recent number of the Southern Churchman, and Shinto is the subject of our program this evening.

It has been said that religiously, Japan can best be understood if we divide it into the Christian and the non-Christian groups. The Christians are few in number, but that group controls its members well. It has also produced a number of very fine Christian characters that will compare well with any that any nation has produced. Such is Kagawa, who is probably the most prominent Christian outside of Europe and America today.

The other religions are grouped together because that is the way people think of them. Also the average Japanese has a religion made up of all of them. Thus he gets his main idol, Buddha, and his ideas of the future life from Buddhism. When he wants to worship he goes there to their temple. His Bible he gets from Confucianism, which gives him the classics of China and the moral teachings of that great sage. But his ordinary actions, such as his doctrines, his ceremonies, etc., he gets from Shinto, and his highest aspirations are ruled by Bushido, which has been called the "Code of the Samurai." The Samurai, we remember, were the nobility of old Japan. But before we go into Bushido, it will be interesting to see what Shinto teaches of the way the world was made.

The Teachings of Shinto.

Shinto teaches that in the beginning, after heaven and earth had been separated, that there were two gods who stood on the bridge of heaven and thrust a spear into the liquid mass beneath. When they drew it out, the falling drops became an island to which they descended. It was the first of the islands of Japan. They made other islands and also raised quite a family. These became the gods of Japan. One of them was the Fire God who killed his mother. His father descended to the underworld to attempt to bring her back to the land of the living. He was unsuccessful in this, so on his return he made a great number of other gods from his articles of clothing and from the parts of his body until there were eight hundred myriad of them. We remember that a myriad is ten thousand, so that with eight million gods, they were well supplied.

One of the eight million was the Sun Goddess. She quarreled with her brothers and sisters and in a peeve went into a cave. This left the world in darkness, so they decided to try to get her to come out, and with this idea put on a big "song and dance" show for her benefit. She could not resist the music and came out. In order to keep her, they presented her with a mirror which she thought was another goddess as beautiful as she was. So she stayed. But in a few hours she became peeved again, and again retired to her cave. So they had to put on a dance for her every night in order to have another day provided.

Of course, the Sun Goddess had to marry. One of her descendants was Jimmu Tenno, who was the first Emperor, or Mikado, of Japan. Owing to the prominent use made of the mirror it became the symbol of Shinto just as the Cross is of Christianity.

The History of Shinto.

Shinto seems originally to have been pure Animism, or nature worship combined with veneration of the Emperor. To it are still attached a great many animistic practices like beating a drum to drive out the devils that cause sickness, so that it has been said to be a combination of the superstitions of Old Japan. If we feel inclined to ridicule the up-to-date Japanese on this score, let us remember that some people in backwoods places in America still believe in witchcraft, as was shown by the witchcraft murder in Pennsylvania a few years ago.

About fourteen hundred years ago Buddhism came to Japan and taught so much about the future life that Shinto dropped out of the life of most of the Japanese. But about three hundred years ago there was a revival of it. This took the form of a study of the old beliefs. It caused a big revolution that did away with the power of the Shoguns. These were the big nobles of the land. This meant that the country came very quickly out of feudalism. For this Revolution was only completed at about the time of our own War Between the States. But instead of making the country a republic as did most of the revolutions with which we are familiar, it placed the Mikado on the throne in reality, for before that time he had been only a figurehead.

At the end of the last century the officials of what we may call the Shinto Church, requested the Mikado that Shinto be no longer considered a religion, but merely as a society for the purpose of fostering patriotism and of holding patriotic ceremonies. Thus the government claims that it is entitled to the support of all loyal subjects, and is thus one of the four religions of the country.

Bushido, or The Code of the Samurai.

Bushido is sometimes likened to the Chivalry of the West, as it grew up in the age of Feudalism and in many ways tempered its harshnesses. It is also called by the Japanese themselves, "The Soul of Japan." It is thus closely associated with its history and, though influenced to a certain extent by Buddhism and Confucianism, has earned the right to be called the highest and most beautiful flower of Shinto.

Patriotism and Loyalty are its cardinal virtues. From the time a child can speak he is taught to cry "Banzai Nippon," Hurrah for Japan. He is also armed with tiny swords and taught how to use them and that the highest glory that can come to any man is to die for the Mikado. One cannot help but contrast this to the wave of Pacifism that is sweeping this country to the tune of "I Did Not Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier." Its practical effect is seen in the story of the group of young aviators who are pledged in time of war to be dropped with bombs so that they may direct them where they will do the greatest damage to the enemy. The fact that the Nipponese patriots will be blown into a thousand bits is merely an incident in their dying for the Mikado.

Comparison With Christianity.

The Religion of Japan has probably earned the tribute of raising its people higher than any other non-Christian religion. But it has certain places where Christianity is greatly needed to fill in its gaps.

Thus among them, love of Country and honor are only mildly tempered by politeness and compassion, so that at times, the most intense cruelty seems to us to be unrebuked by their religion. So Christianity brings what we may call the trinity of Love to them. Love of our fellowmen is most important for them as for us. Then the Love of God for us, as taught by the Holy Scriptures that should make us willing to do all things for Him, is needed in Japan, as well as in America. But most of all, they, as we, need the Love of Christ, which was shown when He walked among us, healing the sick and cheering the despondent.

But before we leave the subject of the Religion of Japan, we should tell the story of how about fifty years ago the Mikado sent messengers to the Western world to report what among them should be copied in his country. In course of time, they returned and reported: "The medicine of the West is superior to ours, adopt it; their factories are superior to ours, adopt them; their science is better, adopt it; their religion claims wonderful things, but the people neither believe it nor practice it. Leave it alone. Ours is superior. At least we believe ours."

So we, who are Christians, should remember that not only do we compare Shinto with Christianity, but the Japanese compare Christianity with Shinto. We should severely test ourselves to see whether their charge is true.

"The Gospel to which men will listen is the Gospel according to you."

COLLECT FOR THIRD SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

O Lord Jesus Christ, Who at Thy first coming didst send Thy messenger to prepare Thy way before Thee: Grant that the ministers and stewards of Thy mysteries may likewise so prepare and make ready Thy way by turning the hearts of the disobedient to the wisdom of the just, that at Thy second coming to judge the world we may be found an acceptable people in Thy sight, who liveth and reigneth with the Father and the Holy Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

STRENGTH WILL COME TO YOU.

Brownleigh Freude Dennis.

What brings peace to the troubled soul
And gives us strength to smile?
I have looked for the answer everywhere
O'er many a weary mile.

O Father, I am so tired—
Just give me space to rest.
Let me feel the shadow of Thy wing
And lean upon Thy breast.

What brings peace to the troubled soul?
The answer——so simple, so true——
Just keep an uplifted heart
And strength cill come to you.

Preparation for Christ.

The preparation for Christ's first coming was a long process, extending at least from the time of Abraham to that of John the Baptist, who received the final commission to make ready for the Lord a people prepared for Him and to herald His immediate appearance.

On the surface the response to this preparation was very meagre; only a few were ready to accept and acknowledge Jesus as the Christ; yet we are told that He came in "the fulness of the time," that is, when the time was ripe, at the right time, when the world was ready for the purpose for which He came. The previous preparation had not been all lost; the world was not ready to receive the first seeds of His kingdom. And so, when He first came, He sowed the seed; He instilled the first little leaven of His own spirit which should eventually sweeten the whole world; He laid the foundation of His kingdom. And he established a society, a Church, to carry on His work; to make ready for the Lord a people prepared for Him against His coming again; to build up and extend His kingdom till all the kingdoms of the world should become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ, and He should be able to take the power and reign.

Now, what is Christ going to do when He comes again? We are perhaps apt rather to over-concentrate on His coming to judge the living and the dead; on the destruction of the wicked; and the end of the world. His coming will certainly be with judgment; every coming of Christ must be; and that naturally inspires us with fear and dread. But whatever may be the nature and form of that judgment, whatever may be involved in it, and whatever its consequences may be for individuals or nations, we must never forget that it will be in the hands of a holy and most merciful Saviour, a most worthy Judge eternal; and that, like Abraham of old, we may rely upon the conviction, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

But principally He is coming to reign on the earth; the judgment will be a passing episode, His reign will be permanent. His advent is not going to mean the end of the earth, only the end of an age, the end of one age and the beginning of a new age; He is going to reign on a new earth, an earth that has been renewed, made fresh and wholesome, an earth in which will dwell righteousness. And it is the mission of the Church to renew the earth against that day: to make ready for the Lord a people prepared for Him; to create such a strong desire for universal righteousness that when the Divine Dictator comes and lays down His laws and says, "This must stop," "This must be," the world will be ready, willingly and gladly, to accept His will, and will cry out, "This is what we have been longing for; this is the condition we have been feebly striving after; this is the Leader we have been waiting for; we are ready for His lead"; it will not be so perfect that it could do without Him, but it will be ready for Him to take control.

It is now nearly two thousand years since the Church received her commission to make ready for the Lord a people prepared for Him. Are we ready yet? If He were to come today would His rule be accepted now any more than it was before? I think not. Many of His ideals, as ideals, would meet with much sympathy; great numbers would feel that there was something in themselves which would go out to and respond to those ideals; but that he would be placed on a throne and allowed to put those ideals into practice is more than doubtful; we are not yet a people prepared for a rule of universal righteousness.

I believe that the crisis through which the world is now passing is going to issue in our taking one great step nearer to the mind of Christ; it is going to bring home to us the vital necessity for goodwill, to teach us, as nothing before has taught us, that "if one member suffer, all the members suffer with it." The world is struggling just now in the birth throes of that conception; it is just beginning to realize that it is not by weakening and injuring one another by war, diplomacy, or commerce, but only by mutual help that the world can live at all; it has been a long time learning it, but it is getting a perception of it at last, and if it comes to the birth, as I believe it will, and the ideal develops into practice, it will be a great advance towards making ready for the Lord a people prepared for Him.

But we must remember that it is not only over the present area of Christendom that Christ is coming to reign, but over all the earth. In western land the spirit of Christ, though not always recognized as such, has caught hold, and is slowly working God's purpose out; but there are great tracts and masses into which that spirit has not yet found an entrance, though almost everywhere it is knocking at the door; and it is the mission of the Christian Church to spread the spirit of Christ in those dark regions; it has done it before, and it must do it again. We must take a wider view of Christian missions than merely the conversion of individual heathen, though that is no small or unimportant part of their work. The ultimate object is to instil the spirit of Christ into a nation or a country. It will be a long process, as it always has been. We ourselves are hardly yet a Christian nation; it is that sorrowful fact which tempts Mr. Gandhi and others like him to say that they can admire Christ but they cannot admire Christians. But the progress and success are not to be measured by the conversion of so many Hindus, Brahmins, and Kaffirs to the Christian faith; these might almost be called for the time being the by-products of missionary work; we cannot estimate the value of Christion missions by being told how many Japanese have publicly embraced the Christian religion in twelve months or ten years; the real test is how far the Christian spirit is slowly saturating into the minds of the Japanese, or any other, nation. Are they gradually being prepared to receive Christ? Captious critics have amused themselves by calculating how many hundreds or thousands of pounds it costs to convert one Hindu; but they take no account of how many thousands or millions of Hindus are being made to think, and to think with increasing sympathy, and are examining now for themselves the spirit of Christ.

I am one of those who are ready to believe that the open acceptance of Christ by these great nations may come some day with startling suddenness, and be a more rapid development than any that has been in the past. Hitherto, nations, including ourselves, have been slowly moving, by way of experiment, towards the adoption of a system that has been long taught but never tried, and even now is being accepted only nervously and piecemeal; but if we are bold in our advances and true to our position these other peoples will have before them, not an experiment, but an experience of what the spirit of Christ has done for the foremost nations of the world; and they will be the more quickly ready to adopt it for themselves.

For the Southern Churchman.

A PRAYER.

Putnam Kyle.

I come to Thee in prayer
That Thou grant peace to one
Who has his cross to bear.

Lord, may he know that Thou
Art at his side; that he,
In confidence, may bow

His tired head and feel
That Thy eternal Love
Will shelter him and heal

Each wound. Make strong again
The heart that loves Thee well,
O Lord, I pray. Amen.

TRUST.

Grace French Smith.

Matchless rose with perfume breath,
Too lovely to dream of death,
You bare your heart of gold on my knee,
Trusting your life to me.

Precious child, your life is heir
To beauty beyond compare,
You bring a heart of faith to my knee,
Trusting your life to me.

Loving God, make me a child,
With quiet faith—when reviled
To drop with prayer upon the knee,
Trusting my life to Thee.

FOR THE CHILDREN

THE BETTER WAY.

It is better to lose with a conscience clean
  Than win with a trick unfair;
It is better to fail and to know you've been,
  Whatever the prize was, square
Than to claim the joy of a far-off goal
  And the cheers of the standers-by
Than to know down deep in your inmost soul
  A cheat you must live and die.

Who wins by tricks may take the prize,
  And at first he may think it sweet,
But many a day in the future lies
  When he'll wish he had met defeat.
For the man who lost shall be glad at heart
  And walk with his head up high
While his conqueror knows he must play the part
  Of a cheat and a living lie.

The prize seems fair when the fight is on,
  But save it is truly won
You will hate the thing when the crowds are gone,
  For it stands for a false deed done,
And it's better you never should reach your goal
  Than ever success to buy
At the price of knowing deep down in your soul
  That your glory is all a lie.

In Oscar Blain's Boots.

Sammy Johnson had just been going to school in the fifth grade a few days, when his teacher sent home a sealed note to his mother. Sammy was very curious to know what it was all about, but he knew better than to open it. He presented it to his mother, loitered a few moments in hope she would open it, but when she didn't he reluctantly went out to play.

That evening after supper Sammy went out to play with the neighborhood gang. They were in the midst of an exciting game when mother came to the door and called to him: "Sammy, I want you to come in now."

"Aw shucks, mom! It isn't bedtime yet, and it's just now my turn to hide. I've a grand place to hide and—"

"Never mind about that. No, it isn't bedtime yet, but I want you to study your time-tables, son. Miss Brown has asked me to help you learn them."

"Learn! Learn! Learn! That's all I'll hear from now on. I wish there wasn't such a thing as learning!"

Mother placed Sammy's arithmetic book open before him, and smiling down at him she said, "Oh, Sammy, don't say that. What if you couldn't learn? There will be things to learn all the rest of your life, so you may just as well enjoy it."

Sammy sat pouting and staring at his book, his eyes moving as if he were reading his times-tables. But he wasn't seeing figures, he was seeing big, stalwart boys searching here and there, up and down dark alleys, in and out among big signboards. He might just as well have spent the evening out with the boys for all he accomplished leaning over his book. Bedtime came at last and Sammy really welcomed it for the first time in his life.

He had snuggled under the covers for what seemed only a few minutes when he heard a strange voice. Turning around, he saw a little old man with a long white beard.

"Hello, my boy. Did you say that you wished there wasn't such a thing as learning? Well, you surely shouldn't have to if you feel that way about it."

Sammy replied. "Oh, boy! That sounds great. But tell me, what can I do about it?"

"Just do as I say."

"O. K. I'm ready to jump."

The little old man laughed a funny chuckling laugh and said, "Jump is right. I was just going to tell you that you must jump three times, just as high off the ground as ever you can."

Sammy thought that sounded rather silly. He couldn't see what jumping had to do with escaping learning. But he finally decided that he would try it, since it couldn't possibly do any harm. Sammy jumped high into the air, but he came down Sammy Johnson just like he went up. He jumped a second time into the air with no more result than the first time. But the third time he gave a tremendous jump, and when he came down he landed right in a pair of big, high boots. He was so surprised that he couldn't say anything for a few minutes. When he turned to ask the little old man the meaning of it, the little old man was gone.

"Whose boots are these?" said Sammy as he stood gazing at the unknown objects of curiosity. "I know! They are Oscar Blain's. He's that big boy in the first grade who started four years ago and when I did and he's still there. Can't even write his name yet, and can't read a word. But what am I doing in his boots?"

Sammy made several desperate attempts to step out of the high boots, but each vain attempt was rewarded with an awkward loss of balance which nearly ended in a spill.

Across the street, he noticed a group of boys going somewhere. "Hey, fellers!" yelled Sammy. "Stop and play a while!"

The boys, who seemed to be having a good time laughing and talking, paid no attention to the invitation, but hurried on. Other groups of children passed by going in the same direction. Sammy wondered where they were all going. He decided to follow them and find out. When Sammy reached the schoolgrounds he went over to where the big boys were playing baseball, and he asked if he might play. The boys were kind to him at first, but after explaining the rules of the game over and over without any effect, they finally lost patience and the referee shouted to him, "Get out of our game!" Sammy felt like crying, but he blinked back the tears and went over to a group of smaller boys who were playing marbles. He just couldn't remember when it was his time to shoot, so the other boys just let his turn go by. He found himself standing looking on instead of playing with them.

The school bell rang and Sammy was glad, for he had been bored just watching the others play. When they were inside the teacher read a long story to them. It seemed so "all mixed up" to Sammy. He couldn't keep the characters straight. Then the teacher asked them to write what they liked about the story. Sammy couldn't remember how to make the letters, so he made funny little marks on his paper and kept his hand over them for fear some child would see his attempts and laugh at him. When the teacher called on him to read the simplest sentence in the lesson, his eyes filled with tears so that he couldn't have seen the words had he been able to read them.

On his way home to dinner Sammy was so miserable that he cried out, "Oh, I wish I could learn like other children."

The little old man suddenly appeared before him, and with a twinkle in his eye said, "You really want to learn, do you?"

"I'd be the happiest boy ever," sobbed Sammy, "if I could just learn."

Placing his hand on Sammy's shoulder, the little old man said to him, "Yes, my lad, you'll find that the more you learn the happier and richer your life becomes. Now just do as I say. Jump three times just as high as ever you can."

Sammy gave one, two, three jumps, and thump—Sammy woke up and found himself sprawled on the floor near his bed. Mother came rushing up-stairs to see what all the noise was about.

Sammy said, "Oh, I just got up early to study my times-tables. I'm going to surprise Miss Brown and know every one of them perfectly today."

Mother listened intently as Sammy told his queer dream. He finished by saying thoughtfully, "And, mother, I think I can be more kind to poor Oscar Blain after being in his boots for awhile."—Junior World.

The Sweet Peas.

Mary's bright eyes saw mother as she opened a small package that father had brought home the night before.

"What's that, mother?"

"Peas," said mother.

"Peas?" asked Mary. "Are they good to eat?"

"No," said mother, "these are not the kind of peas we eat. These are the kind that make pretty flowers. Don't you remember the flowers we had last year out by the garden fence? How would you like to have some flowers this year your very own?"

"Oh, goody; goody! Some flowers all my very own!"

"Then get on your cap and coat, and we will go out and put the seeds to bed, in old Mother Earth, for they will have to sleep a long time."

When Mary and her mother went into the garden, they found that father had already made a little narrow bed all along the garden fence, and mother showed Mary how to put the little seeds into the bed and to cover them with the dirt covers.

Some of the little seeds said, "Umph, we're not sleepy," and they gave a great big roll and rolled right out of the covers.

Then they said, "My, it's much nicer out here with Jolly Round Sun shining down than it would be shut up in that bed in old Mother Earth."

But, after a time, old Jolly Round Sun, himself, went to bed, and it began to get cold and colder and colder, and these little seeds began to get hard and harder and harder, until they got so very hard they could never make any pretty flowers at all.

Some of the little seeds had rolled so far that they rolled under some leaves, and they said, "Now, old Jolly Round Sun has gone to bed, so we will sleep here, and, in the morning, when old Jolly Sun gets up, we can have a much nicer time than if we were shut up in that bed in old Mother Earth."

But, in the morning, old Jolly Round Sun did not get up, and the cold North Wind began to blow, and the cold Rain came pitter-patter down, and it rolled these little seeds out from under the leaves, and rolled them along, and rolled them along; and they began to get soft, and softer, until, at last, they fell all to pieces, and they never could make any pretty flowers at all.

But the little seeds that had stayed in the bed of old Mother Earth were just as warm and comfy as they could be. One of them said, "It's dark, and I'm scared."

But another little seed said, "Oh, we're all right. I'm sleepy. Let's go to sleep."

So they shut their eyes and went to sleep, and they slept so long that, when they woke up, they stretched so hard they split their little jackets right up the back, and out of each little seed came a little white stem.

These little white stems pushed up, and pushed up, until one day they pushed right out of the covers, and looked straight up into Mary's bright blue eyes; for she had been watching and watching, and asking her mother "When will my little seeds begin to grow?"

Now, old Jolly Round Sun was shining all warm and bright; the cold North Wind had gone away, and the warm South Wind was blowing; and every few days the soft Warm Rain pattered down and gave the little stems all the water they wanted to drink; and they grew and grew, and, after a while, some little leaves came all over them. Soon they began to reach out little fingers to find something to hold to, to help them climb, and Mary's mother said, "We must tie some strings to the fence for them to hold to."

So Mary and mother tied strings to sticks stuck into the ground all along behind the row of little vines. Then they tied the other ends of the strings to the top of the fence, and the little fingers twisted around and around them, and the stems grew up so high that they were as tall as Mary herself.

One day Mary came running to mother, and said, "Mother, come quick! See the little green things all over my sweetpea vines."

"Why," said mother, "those are the little cases that hold the flowers, the buds. See, here is a little flower right now trying to get out."

Sure enough, before that very night, there was a little pink flower sitting up on the stem and nodding right at Mary. In a few days there were more flowers than Mary could hold in her two hands.

As Mary looked at them, she said, "Mother, whatever did make these pretty flowers grow out of those ugly little seeds we put to sleep in Old Mother Earth so long ago?"

And mother said, "Right in the heart of each of those little seeds God had put what we call 'life', and that is what made them grow."

Polly's Tangles.

"I wish my hair wasn't curly," complained Polly.

Mother made no answer but went on brushing Polly's locks.

"I wish there wasn't such a lot of it," fretted Polly. "I'd like to have it all cut off. It's a terrible bother!"

Still mother said nothing. She was trying very hard to straighten out a tangle without hurting her cross little girl.

"And I do wish it wasn't red!" snapped Polly. "I hate red hair!"

"So do I," exclaimed Brother Jimmy "If your hair wasn't red, maybe you wouldn't have such a terrible temper." And Jimmy hurried from the room before mother could reprove him for teasing Polly.

"O mother," cried Polly, with a sudden jerk, "that hurts! I wish you'd stop pulling so!"

Mother laid down the comb and brush. Polly had fretted and cried all through the brushing and curling. It was not the tangles that hurt her, for mother was very careful, but the foolish fear of being hurt. Polly made a great deal of trouble in this way every morning. This morning she had been unusually trying.

"Very well, Polly," answered mother. "I won't bother you any more. We'll leave your hair just as it is." Then she left the room.

Polly went to the mirror. She saw there a little girl with one side of her hair in smooth, shining curls and the other side a bright, tangled mass. How queer and one-sided she looked!

Then Jimmy came into the room. "Hello!" he cried. "What's the matter? You make me think of 'Diddle, dumpling, my son John'."

Polly's lip began to quiver. There were worse things, it seemed, than having your hair brushed and curled. Polly never could take teasing good-naturedly.

It was very trying to appear before people with her hair only half curled. And, oh, how ashamed she was when a neighbor came in! She went to her room and tried to curl her own hair, but her little fingers were so short and her hair so long that she failed entirely.

Pretty soon auntie drove up and called her to come out for a ride. Then Polly's head went down on the window sill and she began to sob.

Mother came into the room. "Is my little girl ready to stand still and have her hair curled?" she asked.

Polly jumped up and ran eagerly to her. She kept very quiet while mother gently brushed and curled the neglected hair.

"Why, there wasn't a single tangle!" she cried when mother had finished.

"Of course not," answered mother. "It isn't the tangles in the hair that hurt you, Polly. It is the tangles in a little temper. They are the serious matter. The tangles in the hair come out very easily. I'll attend to them and see that they do not hurt you. Do you think you can straighten out the tangles in the temper?"

Polly felt very much ashamed and told her mother that she certainly meant to try.

The Visiting Shoes.

"Tom," in a long drawn tone of admiration, "you certainly shined 'em."

"Think so myself." Tom leaned out on the rock to see the reflection of his shoes in the mountain pool. A look at that shining image thrilled him even more than one at the shoes themselves. He humped himself ready for a jump back to the shale bank where Joe stood. But the rock was slippery. Tom wavered. Joe, barefoot, plunged into the stream, steadied him and in a second both boys were sitting hunched up on the shale. "Saved me." Tom grinned

"Maybe. Don't believe anything could ruin shoes good as those. I asked and asked for a pair, but those were the only small ones that came out in that box from Philadelphia."

"And they just fitted me."

"Bet you they'd fit me, too. Tom, could you, would you—"

"Let you put them on?" Tom was slipping the shoes from his feet. "Sure, go ahead. They fit you for a fact."

"And don't hurt that place on my foot at all. Hadn't been laid up with that cut," he twisted his foot to show the scar, "I might have gotten them, instead of you," he teased.

"Might," Tom's mind flickered back to the picture of the schoolhouse, to that day; the box, dresses, hats, shoes! He had waited breathless. Shoes big, shoes bigger, the very last pair fitted him. He had tied the laces together swung the shoes about his neck and strutted off home. "Tough you were laid up with that cut," he stated, "does it still hurt?"

"If it's rocky. I'm going over to see Bill tomorrow," he added.

"Round road." Tom whistled through his teeth. Suddenly he leaned over and thrust the shoes back into Joe's hand. "You wear' em," he said.

"Tom! You don't mean it, you can't."

"But I do. So long. Off at daybreak? won't see you then. Me? I'm lazy." Tom was lazy next morning, the sun was shining down the hollow and striking back from the gurgling stream when Tom opened his door. He almost stepped into a sort of rough basket woven of green leaves. Through the leaves shone rosy plums. "Joe left 'em here, only plums around back of his house.—Say, they were great," he hailed Joe the minute he saw him coming up the path. "Where're the shoes?" he asked abruptly. Joe stood barefoot.

"I—I—Bill has 'em," Joe stammered. "I got a lift back to the foot of the hollow. Bill wanted to get to the picnic, Tom; I knew you would lend 'em if you'd been there. He—he sent you a basket of raspberries, I left them at home, come on get 'em."

"Raspberries," Tom hefted the basket, "let's leave some at Gramma Rowe's."

"And you gave most of the plums to Aunt Lou, I heard about it. Well, Bill said he'd have the shoes back by Saturday." But Saturday night, Bill's uncle handed Tom a knobby bag. Apples. "Asa wanted to go to church, he begged Bill—" Tom grunted as he sat the bag of apples on his floor. " 'Nough to make a pie, make Ma Sayles one, too—hm!" He felt in his blouse pocket for the stub of a pencil. He had a newspaper picture tacked on the walls and on the margin he wrote: Tuesday and Wednesday, Joe, Red Plums. Thursday and Friday, Bill, Raspberries. Sunday Asa—"and if he sends me anything I'll throw it at him."

"Slow, go slow," Joe stepped in the doorway. "Don't you like plums and things?"

"Of course, but I don't want to be paid every time I—You see some other fellow sent them to me, or I wouldn't have had them at all."

"But you had 'em and you lent 'em and we had—well plums and things, it sort of went all around."

"I see. Hold on, we all had good times and good things, sharing. Great That's the way of it, helping along, sharing, and everybody is happier and better off, don't you forget that. I won't, either."

ROBIN AND THE CHICK.

A plump little robin flew down from a tree
To pick up a worm he happened to see.
A frisky young chicken came scampering by,
And gazed at the robin with wondering eye.
Said the chick: "What a queer-looking chicken is that!
Its wings are so long and its body so fat!"
While the robin remarked loud enough to be heard:
"Dear me! An exceedingly strange-looking bird!"
"Can you sing?" robin asked, and the chicken said, "No"—
But asked in turn if the robin could crow.
So the bird sought a tree, and the chicken a wall,
And each thought the other knew nothing at all.

FAREWELL FUNCTIONS HONOR BISHOP McKIM.

Church, University, America-Japan Society Join in Paying Tribute to His Work.

His Retirement Marks Close of 56 Years of Leadership and High Accomplishment.

The Japan Advertiser, Tokyo, Japan, of October 31 and November 6, gives prominent space and beautiful eulogies to Bishop McKim, on the occasion of his retirement and his departure, which took place on November 7. The House of Bishops accepted his resignation at the recent meeting in Houston.

We quote the following from The Advertiser:

Next Monday afternoon the venerable Right Rev. John McKim, D. D., LL. D., Bishop of North Tokyo and Chancellor and founder of the present St. Paul's University and its related institutions, will be accorded a great farewell before his retirement from active service. Participating in the ceremonies will be the university advisers, the university trustees, the faculties of the university, Junior College and the Middle School and the student bodies of all three divisions of Rikkyo Gakuin.

In addition, Prince Iyesato Tokugawa, as president of the America-Japan Society, as well as an Adviser of the University, with a committee of the society, will attend.

The all-Rikkyo farewell will be preceded by a luncheon in Bishop McKim's honor at the residence of Bishop and Mrs. Charles S. Reifsnider, which will be attended by all advisers, trustees, the president and deans. Following the luncheon the Bishop will be escorted through the campus grounds among pathways lined with students, where the farewell ceremony will take place. Dr. Shigeharu Kimura, director of the university, will preside. One middle school student and one university student will speak brief farewell messages on behalf of the student bodies, after which the Rev. Dr. Shigeo Kojima, representing the middle school faculty, and Dr. Kimura, representing the Junior College and University faculties will offer farewells on behalf of the teachers.

Two Farewell Tokens.

Bishop Reifsnider will speak on behalf of Rikkyo Gakuin Corporation and present a purse of gold, the farewell gift of the students and teachers, to Bishop McKim. Prince Iyesato Tokugawa will then speak in the dual capacity as an Adviser of the university and president of the America-Japan Society, after which he will present Bishop McKim with the testimonial Japanese scroll which has been signed by more than 250 prominent Japanese and foreign leaders of Japan as an appreciation of the Bishop's long life of work in the development of the spiritual, educational, medical and social welfare of the Japanese people. Bishop McKim will give his farewell message to the assembly, after which the Rikkyo anthem will be sung. Bishop McKim will then give his blessing to the assembly after which Dr. Kimura will lead in three banzai for him.

New Home in Honolulu.

Bishop McKim will sail on Thursday, November 7, on the Asama Maru to make his home in Honolulu.

With the retirement of Bishop McKim there comes to a close a page of history in the spiritual, educational, medical and social welfare development of the nation that has never been equalled in the period since Japan opened its doors eighty years ago to foreign intercourse. For fifty-six years Bishop McKim has been one of the foremost of leaders among the host of foreign missionaries who have come to Japan during this period. Few missionary leaders have ever come to these shores and lived so long among the people here as has Bishop McKim. Although his career is ended forever, there will be written in the annals of modern Japan's history the contributions made to the people of Japan by this teacher, administrator, priest and bishop.

In each of these capacities, throughout his long career, Bishop McKim has always been intimately connected with St. Paul's University. On the campus of Rikkyo Gakuin, where he began his career on March 1, 1880, when his predecessor, the late Bishop Channing Moore Williams, asked him to teach in the original St. Paul's School which had been opened only six years before in 1874, he will say next Monday his final farewell to the large modern Christian university organization he himself founded and brought to full university status in 1922. Drawn up in the largest assembly ever to be held on the campus next Monday afternoon, more than 2,000 young men of the present student body, the inheritors of the tradition he has built up through a long and vital period of Japanese life will bid him Godspeed and good-bye.

Helped Develop Church.

Bishop McKim ever held high his mission board's "belief that the vocation of the Christian missionary is to follow the example of his Master in seeking to save not only souls, but minds and bodies the salvation of the whole man and not part of him," and in this belief he has waged an unceasing battle for the spiritual and moral welfare of the Japanese people. During his long life and work among the people of Japan he has brought about the development of an autonomous national Church, the Nippon Seikokwai, with an educated priesthood of its own with three of its dioceses already turned over to Japanese Bishops. This accomplishment alone has won the praise and admiration of more than 50,000,000 members of the Anglican communion in England, in Canada and in the United States.

During his more than half a century of work here he has planned and led the advance which has brought into being some of the greatest Christian educational and medical institutions in the nation, whose fame has long since spread far beyond the confines of the Empire. These have been mighty friendship links that bind the peoples of Japan with millions of thoughtful Christian men and women throughout the world. Probably no foreign resident leaves behind him a greater number of friends in every part of the nation than does Bishop McKim. Few leaders have ever played so great a part in the welfare of the people. Literally tens of thousands of Japanese have been educated in the institutions he has organized and an equal number have been in some way treated in the two great medical plants, St. Luke's International Medical Center and St. Barnabas' Hospital in Osaka, which he organized and brought to their present greatness. Yet through his long career of building the frame-work of his Church and institutions and in building the leadership necessary to operate them successfully, few leaders have been faced with so much natural destruction of his works as has Bishop McKim. Several fires and earthquakes during his fifty-six years of service have wiped out his schools, hospitals and churches, yet each time the Bishop found courage to rebuild and carry on.

The greatest crisis came when the Bishop was already past his seventy-first birthday. On September 1, he was again faced with a mighty destruction of all material things he had spent forty-five years in building. It was then he cabled to his New York headquarters the famous message, "All Gone But Faith in God," which was relayed throughout the length and breadth of the United States to his more than 2,000,000 supporters. With a vigor which might well be the envy of men less than half his age, the Bishop set about to rebuild his work, and during the past twelve years and through a period of world-wide depression and a great slackening in missionary giving, few leaders can point to more far-reaching accomplishments than Bishop McKim, now a veteran of more than eighty-three years. For his accomplishments for the welfare of the Japanese people the Emperor conferred upon the Bishop the fourth Order of the Sacred Treasure in 1924.

FORWARD MOVEMENT NEWS.

Cincinnati.—Youth and education is the theme of Forward Movement literature for Epiphany-Pre-Lent. The general subject of the Forward Movement manual of Bible readings and meditations, "Forward—day by day," is Growth and Training in Home and Church. The manual sells at the rate of fifty copies for $1.00.

Two special booklets prepared by the Department of Religious Education, National Council, for use during this season are being published by the Forward Movement Commission.

"Youth and Education," a booklet giving a parish program and for the use of leaders, teachers, parent-teacher groups, is being supplied at ten cents a copy.

"Your Parish and Its Young People," a smaller booklet dealing with youth activities, is published at five cents a copy.

The Commission is urging the clergy and other leaders to place their orders immediately for this literature in order to avoid possible delay caused by the rush of the Christmas holidays.

Remittances with orders will simplify the work of the Commission and also bring a saving of funds.

Orders for thousands of copies of the manual already have been received at the Commission's offices, 223 West Seventh Street, Cincinnati.

Chicago.—The Forward Movement program in St. Barnabas' Church here includes daily intercessions at the chapel altar, house-to-house calls in search for the unchurched, and "alphabetical nights" for lapsed communicants.

Where there are third and fourth floor apartment buildings, the Forward Movement provides something of the joy of "mountain climbing in the Alps," said the Rev. W. S. Pond, rector, in commenting on the house-to-house calls.

The rector, in his "alphabetical nights" plan, invites all parishioners, whose names begin with a particular letter, to the church for a brief service, hymns, a conference on what Christ expects of His disciples, and what might be expected from parishioners who have, or do not have, income, leisure, and other opportunities for service.

Norwalk, Conn.—The Forward Movement literature cannot be beaten "for sermon material to awaken the people to a more fervent zeal and a fuller realization of the needs of the Church," according to the Rev. N. R. Pearson of Grace Church, Norwalk. He has been using the literature in his parish and pulpit ever since the first booklet was issued.

Philadelphia.—Bishop Taitt has appointed the following clergymen members of the Forward Movement Commission in the Diocese of Pennsylvania, the Rev. Messrs. Wallace E. Conkling, James M. Niblo, Granville Taylor, Howard Wier and Stanley V. Wilcox, chairman.

THE REV. ALMON R. PEPPER BECOMES EXECUTIVE SECRETARY, CHURCH MISSION OF HELP.

The Rev. Almon R. Pepper has accepted the office of executive secretary of the National Council, Church Mission of Help and begins his new work January 1. Mr. Pepper graduated from Kenyon College in 1921 and from Nashotah House in 1924. Following his ordination to the priesthood in the latter year he became chaplain on the staff of the New York Protestant Episcopal City Mission Society and while serving as such completed the course of study at the New York School of Social Work, graduating in 1929.

In 1930 Mr. Pepper was appointed executive secretary of the Ohio diocesan social service department and did a notable piece of work in that capacity. In 1932 he was appointed Canon of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, and for the last two years has also served as rector of Grace Church, South Cleveland.

Mr. Pepper is a member of the American Association of Social Workers and has served on the board of directors of several social agencies in Cleveland. He has frequently been a speaker at the Episcopal Social Work Conference.

The election of Mr. Pepper to his new position brings to the national office of the Church Mission of Help the experience of one who is both a priest of the Church and a professionally trained social worker. Mr. Pepper is thirty-five years of age.

PHILLIPS BROOKS' CENTENNIAL TO BE OBSERVED IN HALL OF FAME, NEW YORK UNIVERSITY.

The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Phillips Brooks, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts and author of the Christmas hymn, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," were observed Friday, December 13, at 3:00 P. M., with ceremonies before his bust in the Hall of Fame on the campus of New York University.

Bishop William T. Manning and Chancellor Harry Woodburn Chase of New York University made addresses at the ceremonies. A wreath was laid on the bust of Bishop Brooks by choir boys from the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, and the choir sang the famous theologian's hymn.

The ceremonies was open to the public.

Phillips Brooks was born in Boston on December 13, 1835, and died there, January 23, 1893. He was graduated at Harvard and at the Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexandria, Virginia. He was rector of two churches in Philadelphia before becoming rector of Trinity Church in Boston in 1869, which church he served until he became Bishop of Massachusetts on April 30, 1891.

As a pulpit orator, Brooks was almost unrivaled. When kindled by his subject it seemed to take possession of him and pour itself out with overwhelming speed of utterance. In his early manhood he was an ardent Abolitionist, and in later life he was the author of several religious works.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK IS HEARD OVER RADIO.

"The Preacher's Theme Today" Subject of Conference at College of Preachers.

The Most Rev. William Temple, D. D., primate of England, Archbishop of York, in America for a five weeks' visit, was heard over the radio last Sunday in a sermon delivered at Washington Cathedral and again at a service in Bethlehem Chapel. He was introduced by the Bishop of Washington. Archbishop Temple urged a closer relationship between English-speaking peoples and advocated cooperation in industry. He deplored the tendency to make self and selfish interests the centre of one's life and thought, and declared that "only God is the true and abiding centre".

After the service the distinguished prelate and his wife left for Martinsville, Va., where Mrs. Temple will visit relatives while the Archbishop conducts a conference at the College of Preachers. They will go from here to New York the end of the week.

On Tuesday Bishop Temple spoke to a large gathering at the Willard Hotel under auspices of the English-Speaking Union. Later on he will also speak in Chicago before the Union. He received a warm welcome in Washington and many distinguished men and women assembled for the Union dinner.

"The Preacher's Theme Today" was the general subject of Dr. Temple's series of formal talks at the College of Preachers. The lectures were heard in Bethlehem Chapel in order to accommodate a larger number of the clergy who wished to hear the distinguished visitor. On Tuesday morning the subject was "What Is Revelation", on which the Bishop had some illuminating things to say. Other subjects were "The Centrality and Finality of Christ", "Sin and Atonement" and "Christianity in Politics and Ethics". A select group of the younger clergy, in attendance upon the College of Preachers, heard another series of lectures in the library of the college.

Archbishop Temple, now fifty-four years of age and youthful in appearance, made a highly favorable impression on all who met and all who heard him. His reputation as an advocate of social and economic reform had preceded him, as had also his reputation as a scholar and authority in the realm of theology and ethics. Sometimes referred to as a "Liberal Catholic", the Primate of England, is recognized as a man of broad sympathies and of profound judgment, large in mind and spirit as he is in physical proportions.

He holds that Europe is due another war at an early date "unless authority is established". He stands out for the League of Nations as an "international policing body"—and openly condemned the League for its rather reserved policy regarding Japanese aggression in China.

A Service of Remembrance for the Late Father Huntington.

A service of remembrance for the life and service of the late Father James Otis Sargent Huntington, O. H. C., presided over by Bishop Manning, attracted to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, Sunday afternoon, December 8, a host of representatives of the social work organizations of New York and vicinity. Father Huntington during a long and distinguished ministry was deeply engaged in many forms of social betterment, and among other organizations was a founder of the Church Mission of Help, a national organization dealing primarily with wayward girls and the unmarried mother. The New York diocesan branch of this organization, of which Bishop Manning and the late Jacob Riis were also founders, was sponsor for the memorial service. A tribute to Father Huntington by Bishop Manning preceded the sermon delivered by the Rev. Shirley C. Hughson, successor to Father Huntington as Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross of West Park, New York.

Members of parish branches of the Church Mission of Help in the Diocese of New York joined clergy and choir in the procession which opened the Sunday service.

Father Huntington was born at Roxbury, Massachusetts, July 23, 1854, the son of the Rev. Dr. Frederick Dan Huntington, who later became Bishop of Central New York. At Harvard he and a friend inaugurated the well-known paper, "The Crimson." In 1880 in company with the Rev. Robert S. Dodd, D. D., he began living by a religious rule under the direction of the Rev. George Houghton, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, New York. The little community began its active work at Holy Cross Mission on the lower East Side, and presently Father Huntington took life vows as the first member of the Order of the Holy Cross, which has continued an ever expanding life since that time. He died June 29, last.

Young People's Executive Board Looks Ahead!

The Young People's Executive Board of the Diocese held its meeting at Christ Church Parish House, November 29-December 1, with 100 per cent attendance of young people and advisors. Thomas W. Little, president of the Waco League and Diocesan Y. P. S. L. President, presided over the sessions. Definite plans were made for the advancement of important phases of work among the young people, that is, to encourage each young people's group to have a library, to promote the Young People's Thank Offering, to strengthen the Bishop's Branch of the Y. P. S. L., to stimulate interest in The Snap (Young People's Diocesan Paper), to help develop the Negro young people's work, and to use every possible means to cooperate with the National Commission in the Youth Forward Together Movement of the Episcopal Church. Special emphasis was placed on the Forward Movement and youth's share in it. The outstanding contribution of the week-end meeting to the life and work of the Church among its young people is the move that was made toward the coordination of all young people's groups in the diocese; a small committee composed of representatives from every young people's organization (ages 14 to approximately 18), such as, Junior Daughters of the King, St. Vincent's Guild, Girls' Friendly Society, Order of Sir Galahad, the Y. P. S. L. and others will meet early next spring to share experiences, to decide upon a common objective and to work towards a coordinated Young People's program—a great adventure for Christ in a comparatively new field!

Dr. Butterworth of London Addresses Annual Convention of Board of Berkeley Divinity School.

"Spartan simplicity in the life of theological students has sound educational value in a day when the church demands men," declared Dr. George W. Butterworth of London, England, in his address at the annual convention of the Board of Overseers of the Berkeley Divinity School yesterday. The Rev. Henry E. Kelley of Litchfield acted as chairman, and Prof. Wilbur Urban of Yale University spoke on the weakness of the Church in its failure to support theological education.

"The church needs men of intellectual ability, personality and the power of leadership, if modern youth is to be won for a progressive Christianity," continued Dr. Butterworth. "Berkeley Divinity School is ideally equipped to meet the call of the Church for a disciplined clergy, capable of thinking for themselves." He urged the overseers never to have inferiority feelings about the size of the institution they represented or its financial problems. The spartan life of Berkeley is producing men for the sacred ministry within the State of Connecticut and for the nation. He remarked, that upon his arrival he was astonished at the complete freedom and exchange of opinion on the campus and the healthy and intimate intellectual relationship existing between the faculty and students. Evidences of a developing leadership impressed him greatly. All of this is the genius of a small school, and a guarantee of its possible contribution to a solution of the present problems within the Church. He remarked that he would carry back to England the knowledge that Berkeley Divinity School has made a new doctrine in its method of theological education.

The Board of Overseers discussed the need for raising money and planned a series of meetings during the winter months for the clergy and laity of the State.

Keen Interest Shown in Consecration of St. Luke and St. Peter, in St. Cloud.

The consecration of the Church of St. Luke and St. Peter on November 21 in St. Cloud, marked a notable achievement by this small congregation and their devoted priest, the Rev. Eldred C. Simkins. The keen interest felt therein was shown by the large attendance both of local residents and clergy and friends who came from distant points to rejoice in this event.

The Rev. George G. Shilling, of Avon Park, served as the Bishop's chaplain. Other clergy taking part besides Bishop Wing and the Vicar were: the Very Rev. M. E. Johnson, of Orlando; the Rev. Messrs. Edgar L. Pennington, of Ocala; Martin J. Bram, of Sanford; F. W. B. Dorset, of Melbourne; G. W. R. Cadman, of Lake Wales, and John H. Edwards, D. D., of Daytona Beach and Chicago.

A parish dinner, largely attended, was held that evening, with helpful addresses by the Bishop, by the Rev. G. W. R. Cadman, the Rev. John H. Edwards, D. D., and the Vicar. Bishop Wing was the celebrant for the Special Thanksgiving Holy Communion on the following morning.

This church was erected through union of two early missions, St. Luke's in St. Cloud and St. Peter's in Narcoossee, English settlers in Narcoossee erected there a beautiful Gothic church in 1892, this accomplished chiefly through the work and influence of Colonel and Mrs. W. E. Cadman, who maintained the services for many years, until nearly all the congregation had moved away. In 1930, the Rev. Clayton M. Legge, in charge of the mission at St. Cloud, where they had only a parish house, suggested that the Narcoossee Church, then idle for some years, be taken apart, moved to St. Cloud and rebuilt in its original design except to be enlarged, and that the names of the two missions be combined. This plan was approved and the cornerstone of the reconstructed edifice was laid on November 21, 1930. A debt of $2,800 was necessary in this work and the small group who formed the Woman's Auxiliary in St. Cloud, bravely assumed responsibility for the payment of this debt within ten years. Last Easter Day, in less than five years, the final payment was given and plans were then made to have the consecration on the fifth anniversary of the cornerstone service.

Board of Christian Social Service Meets Considers Social Legislation Which Will be Presented Before Next General Assembly.

An important all-day session on Social Service was called by Bishop Tucker at the Mayo Memorial Church House on December 11.

The Bishop asked the Rev. R. B. Nelson of Winchester to preside, and the opinions of professional workers were heard on various subjects.

After luncheon the Board of Christian Social Service of the diocese was convened by the chairman, the Rev. George P. Mayo, D. D., of Bris, Va., and a findings committee was appointed, headed by the Rev. C. Rankin Barnes, Executive Secretary for Social Service of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Upon its report the following resolutions were adopted:

That the Board of Social Service of the Diocese of Virginia promote a conference with similar boards of the Dioceses of Southern Virginia and Southwestern Virginia on matter of social legislation, which are to be presented to the coming session of the General Assembly, and that such a conference should consider specifically the following: Probation and parole, old age pensions, mothers' aid, public provision for dependent and neglected children away from their own homes, legislation fixing paternity of children born out of wedlock, provision for opportunities for recreation and informal education in connection with the public school system, and the care of feeble-minded children, especially the colored children for whom no provision is now being made.

That the Board meet monthly, except during the summer months, and that some of these meetings be held in various sections of the diocese, possibly at the welfare organizations of the diocese, in order that the members of the Board may come to know better the needs and programs of these institutions.

That the Board register its opinion that progress toward better motion pictures can be secured only if two lines of action are followed together; namely, federal legislation prohibiting compulsory block-booking and blind selling, and a continuous educational emphasis on increasing standards of appreciation and valuation of pictures.

That the Board petition the Board of Trustees of the Seminary in Virginia to make provision in the department of Pastoral Care for courses in Social Case Work, Family Welfare Work, Child Welfare Work and Mental Hygiene.

That the Board arrange for presentation at the meetings of the five convocations of the diocese the social needs of the areas included within each convocation.

It is recommended that a special committee be appointed to consider ways and means of bringing the students, especially those of the Episcopal Church, in the William and Mary School of Social Work into touch with the church, that they may both be helped personally to make themselves Christian social workers and also may learn how the church may help them in their professional career.

That the Chairman, in consultation with the Bishop, appoint a committee to make a survey in the way of an inventory and evaluation of the activities in or related to the field of social work, now being carried on by the Diocese of Virginia; and that this committee may seek the services and advice of especially qualified individuals who are not members of the Board of Social Service.

That the Board create a standing committee on parochial social service which shall take steps to create a specific agency in each parish of the diose for the promotion of social service therein, and that the Board adopt a slogan, "A Parish Social Service Committee or its equivalent in every parish."

That the Chairman, in consultation with the Bishop, be asked to appoint special committee of three to investigate the desirability and possibility of setting up a Church Mission of Help Society for the Diocese of Virginia.

That the Board arrange immediately for an intensive diocesan-wide observance of Social Service Sunday on January 26, through such methods as celebrations of the Holy Communion for social workers, with breakfast following, and special sermons on "The Church and Social Service."

Among the professional social workers present who took part in the discussions were Mr. F. D. Preston, Executive Secretary of the Children' Home Society; Miss Louise F. Price, Assistant Commissioner of Public Welfare; Mrs. Marion Tingling Frost, Case Director of the Family Service Society; Dr. Mary Baughman, Chairman of Institutions of the Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Tufts, of Washington, D. C., a member of the Committee on Churches and Moving Pictures; and Mr. Guy Irving Burch, Executive Secretary of the National Committee on Federal Legislation for Birth Control.

Thanksgiving Service.

The Rev. D. C. Loving, with the assistance of the Rev. S. Y. Craig of the Jerusalem Baptist Church, held a union service Thanksgiving night at North Farnham Colonial Church. The church was lighted with candles and looked very attractive.

The offertory, "Praises to Thee, O God", was sung by Mrs. E. R. Lyell. The offering was given to the needy.

Auxiliaries Meet.

A meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was recently held at St. John's Episcopal Church, Warsaw, the Rev. E. C. Buxton, rector.

Mrs. Robert Barton, Mrs. Henery Batcheller and Miss Charlotte Picot with Mrs. Blake Newton were the most interesting speakers. A similar meeting was held the previous day at Fleeton, the Rev. D. C. Loving, rector. The auxiliaries are very much helped by these visitors and talks and felt especially honored in having our president, Mrs. Barton with us. A. V. Payne.

All Saints Parish Makes Improvements In Church and Guild Hall.

During the past four months the one hundred and fifteen year old parish of All Saints, Portsmouth, has done considerable work upon its eight-four year old church edifice and its one hundred and two year old guild hall. Replacements of wood-work in the arches of nave and aisles and complete redecoration of the interior have taken place in the church. A new furnace has been installed. The guild hall has been enlarged by the addition of a wing giving provision for two large new rest-rooms with complete equipment of plumbing and fixtures. All the work has been paid for upon completion. This parish is without debt. Henry N. Hyde, Rector.

Courses in the Fundamentals Offered in School of Religion.

St. Paul's Church, Chattanooga, recently, had a School of Religion, offering courses in the fundamentals of the Christian Faith along with practical aid for teachers in the Church School. The faculty was composed of: The Very Rev. Israel Noe of St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, who taught a course on the Bible; the Rev. Hiram K. Douglas, Canon of St. Mary's Cathedral, Memphis, who taught a course on Church Symbolism and the Church Year; the Rev. R. A. Kirchoffer of Christ Church, Mobile, Alabama, a course on The Prayer Book; Mrs. Shubael T. Beasley of Memphis, a course on Senior Department Methods; Mrs. W. W. Brooks of Chattanooga, on Junior and Junior High Methods and Materials; Miss Betty Blocker of Chattanooga, on Kindergarten and Primary Methods and Materials. The courses on the whole were well received and were attended by representatives of each Episcopal Church in the city.

WESTERN NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. George A. Beecher, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Beecher's Twenty-fifth Anniversary Celebrated by His Diocese and All Nebraska.

Distinguished citizens, hundreds of churchmen and high officials in the State, in the Masonic Fraternity and the Union Pacific System, from all sections of Nebraska, assembled recently in St. Mark's Pro-Cathedral, Hastings, and participated enthusiastically in the celebration of the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the consecration of the Right Rev. George A. Beecher, D. D., Bishop of Western Nebraska.

The observance of this event began on St. Andrew's Day, November 30, with a Holy Communion at 10 A. M. The Bishop was the celebrant, assisted by the Very Rev. Francis R. Lee, Dean of the Pro-Cathedral, and the Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, Bishop Coadjutor of Minnesota and President of the Province of the Northwest. In the afternoon at four o'clock a reception was tendered the Bishop and Mrs. Beecher in the Clarke Hotel.

On December 1, the First Sunday in Advent, there was a celebration of the Holy Communion at 8 A. M., a Children's Eucharist at 9:30 A. M., and a Choral Eucharist at 11 A. M. The Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, D. D., representing the Province, was the preacher.

A banquet given in honor of Bishop and Mrs. Beecher, was held in the Clarke Hotel on Sunday, December 1, at one o'clock. The Governor of the State, Hon. Roy E. Cochran; the former Attorney General of the State, Hon. Paul E. Good, Bishop Keeler; the Rt. Rev. Ernest V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop of Nebraska; the Very Rev. Francis R. Lee, and William C. Ramsey, Grand Master of the Masonic Fraternity of the State, were among the speakers. Bishop Beecher was the recipient of a large purse containing money. The gift was made possible by his many friends, and was a visible evidence of the esteem in which he is held. Expressions of congratulation came from all over the country.

Throughout Nebraska, Bishop Beecher is known as the "Big Bishop." He is tall, athletic, well-porportioned, striking in appearance, with hair that has grown white in the service of his Master. During this quarter of a century he has labored unremittingly and unwearingly for the upbuilding of the Church. He presides over a missionary district which contains 55,000 square miles. Up and down these rivers and valleys in Western Nebraska, over the crests of the sandhills, from end to end of the diocese, from center to circumference, back and forth, no man knows how many weary miles he has traveled on his divine commission.

Bishop Beecher is one of Nebraska's foremost citizens. For the past twenty years he has been Grand Chaplain of the Masonic Lodge of the State. For ten years he served as Chaplain of the Second Regiment Nebraska National Guards, and was on the Mexican Border during the activities of 1916. He is active in the Nebraska Humane Society, Vice-President of the Bishop Clarkson Memorial Hospital, Omaha, and member of the Board of Trustees of Brownell Hall, the Diocesan School for Girls, in Omaha.

Bible Translation in Pageant.

Over a hundred people took part in a descriptive pageant of Bible translation at Joslyn Memorial, Omaha, on Sunday, December 1. Six scenes representing "The Council of Carthage," "St. Jerome at His Translation," "The Trial of Wycliffe," "Miles Coverdale," "The Authorized Version" and "The Bible in all Languages" were presented by various groups of young people and church school members. The final scene included the reading of St. John 3:16 in Greek, Latin, French, Spanish, Eskimo, Cree and English by various clergy.

The production was under the direction of Miss Eleanor Sprague.

Wytheville Has Church School Mission.

Under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. Devall L. Gwathmey, rector, a novel but most helpful mission, especially in the interest of the Church School, was held at St. John's Church, Wytheville, from November 11-15. The particular purpose of the mission was to reach the parents and sponsors of the young people of the parish and deepen their sense of responsibility and discipleship.

The subjects and speakers on the successive days were: "Friendship," by the rector; "The Christian Home," by the Rev. Cahrles W. Sydnor of Pulaski; "Holy Baptism," by the Rev. Conrad H. Goodwin, temporarily residing at Wytheville; "Wider Contacts," by the rector; "A Message to Youth," by the Rev. J. F. W. Feild of Christ Church, Roanoke.

On Thursday, preceding the service, there was a Christmas Box program and a dedication of Church School teachers. The members of young people's societies of all denominations in the town were invited to hear the address of the Rev. Mr. Feild on Friday.

The attendance at the services was excellent, a heavy rain on Tuesday failed to dampen the enthusiasm of the preacher or the people, and the mission as a whole was considered a distinct success.

Armistice Day Services.

A quiet day of prayer was observed by the Woman's Auxiliary on Armistice Day in all the local parishes.

An impressive Armistice Day service was held at St. John's Church, Savannah, on the Sunday before Armistice Day. A special program of music appropriate to the day was sung by the boys' and men's choirs under the direction of William Brooke Reeve, organist and choirmaster. The Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter is rector of St. John's Church.

Bishop Barnwell Visitor to Savannah.

Bishop Barnwell, who spent last week in Savannah, was kept busy attending receptions and making addresses to the congregations of the local parishes.

On November 12, he gave a missionary talk to the Men's Club of St. John's Church.

Wednesday evening the Bishop and Mrs. Barnwell were guests at the annual parish dinner of St. Paul's Church. Likewise on Friday evening at St. Michael and All Angels' Church. On both occasions the Bishop made inspiring talks on the Every Member Canvass.

A reception was tendered Bishop and Mrs. Barnwell by the four congregations of the city on Thursday evening, in the Gold Room of the DeSoto Hotel. Several hundred attended. In the receiving line were Bishop Reese and his daughter, Mrs. E. B. Freyer, and the rectors of the parishes and their wives.

Negro Delegation Seeks Advice on Italio-Ethiopian Issues.

The Savannah Evening Press contains the following in its issue of November 4:

"Last evening a delegation of Negro citizens visited St. Augustine's Episcopal Church and requested that Archdeacon J. Henry Brown, vicar, set them straight on the Italo-Ethiopian conflict and its relation to the American Negro.

Among other things, the Archdeacon said, "There is no relation between the American Negro and the Ethiopian, although the sentiment of racial sympathy is generally evident. For reasons, that the American Negro does not root biologically in Ethiopian soil, he is devoid of 'the fatherland' emotions so evident in other racial strains making up the population of this country. Coming as his ancestors did from the West Coast of Africa, a separating distance of probably 3,000 miles, it is doubtful if even a very small fractional part of the Negro population ever gave any thought to Ethiopia until the coronation of Emperor Haile Selassie, and no remote idea of racial identification was faintly registered until the present misunderstanding between the two countries."

Again he called attention to the fact that "Ehiopians as such, have held themselves aloof and apart from African natives, and aside from the question of color, there are not uniting bonds sufficiently attractive to move a substantial number to volunteers for service, even though there were no national barriers preventing such a project."

He advised his hearers "to keep cool, and remember as citizens of the United States they were duty bound to observe strictly the neutrality proclamation of the President and not permit a few radicals and self-seekers to unduly excite actions which may later cause bitter reaction."

The Retreat House is beautifully situated on a hill with a plot of thirty acres of woodland surrounding it. Mr. Sturgiss, the warden, makes everyone feel immediately at home in the Retreat House, and Mr. Conover, the rector of the parish, makes one feel even more welcome by his own fine spirit of geniality and kindliness. The early services each day were held in the parish church, and the other services in the improvised chapel in the Retreat House.

It is a real treat to attend such a retreat. The experience and understanding of such a man as Bishop Johnson cannot help but bring a new vision of the office and work of the ministers of Christ. There was an attendance of about fifteen, coming from Brooklyn, Newark, and the Diocese of New Jersey.

Dioceses of Delaware and Pennsylvania Combine for Conference.

Clergy of the Diocese of Delaware united with the clergy in this diocese in the All-Day Clergy Conference called by Bishop Taitt, and the Diocesan Commission on the Forward Movement held in Philadelphia December 11, and which was conducted by the Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, Bishop of Southern Ohio, who is also Chairman of the General Convention Commission on the Forward Movement.

The Clergy Conference, which was held in the Church of the Holy Trinity, followed a Celebration of the Holy Communion and was succeeded at night by the Dinner and Conference for Laymen in the ball room of the Penn Athletic Club. Many of the visiting clergy from Delaware remained to attend the Laymen's meeting, which was under the auspices of the Church Club, an organization of prominent laymen of the diocese. Bishop Hobson, Bishop Taitt and Rev. Wallace E. Conkling, rector of St. Luke's, Germantown, were the principal speakers.

Large Centrally Located Residence Gift W. C. M.H.

Announcement was made yesterday that the Church Mission of Help, an organization of the Church in this diocese, and which for more than twenty years has directed its efforts to the problems of unadjusted girls in the community, including the problems of unmarried mothers, has been the recipient of the gift of a large centrally located residence to be its headquarters and to provide it with the opportunity of expanding its service to the community.

The property, 2139 Locust Street, Philadelphia, a large four-story house a few doors east of Twenty-second Street, it was said, was the gift of a member of the Board of Managers of The Church Mission of Help, and in addition the gift also included the nucleus of an Endowment Fund. The donor, who preferred to remain anonymous, was represented in the transfer of the property by the William I. Mirkil Co. The house which is one of the most attractive in the Rittenhouse Square section of the city, has a frontage of twenty-two feet.

Immediate steps, it was said, will be taken to prepare for occupancy of the house by The Church Mission of Help and its furnishing to meet the requirements of the work which the organization is doing. Arrangements are being made for its dedication by Bishop Taitt the latter part of the month. In addition to providing needed larger quarters for its expanding work, the house will include a chapel, which will be the heart of the house, and also accommodations for girls, the latter for temporary shelter when needed of for further study.

The Church Mission of Help, which is one of the member agencies of the Community Fund of Philadelphia and Vicinity, successor to the Welfare Federation, was started shortly after the outbreak of the World War in 1914 by Episcopalians who felt the Church had a definite and needed service it could give, in giving protection to young womanhood. During its history it has

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. A. R. Eldon Garrett, since 1929 Missionary-in-Charge of St. Hilda's Mission, River Rouge, Michigan, with oversight of St. Michael's Mission, Lincoln Park, became rector of Christ Church, Flint, Michigan, on December 10. Mr. Garrett came to Michigan from the Diocese of Huron, Canada, to take up work in St. Hilda's. Christ Church, Flint, has been without a resident clergyman for the past six months.

The Rev. Clifton Macon, D. D., has become locum tenens at St. John's Church, Charleston, Kanawha County, West Virginia, until the vestry has selected the next rector. Dr. Macon began his duties on the First Sunday in Advent.

The Rev. Keith Chidester, of St. John's, Michigan, has accepted a call to All Saints' Parish, Winter Park, Florida, and will take charge of his new field early in December. His wife is a daughter of the Rev. Carroll L. Bates, retired, who now lives in Winter Park.

Ordinations.

The Rev. William Butler Sperry, a native of Florida, Vicar of Grace Chapel, in the Parish of Grace Church, New York, was ordained to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. Arthur Selden Lloyd, D. D., Senior Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese, at a service in the Chapel on Saturday morning, December 7. This was the first service of ordination ever held in the Chapel, which provides a neighborhood center and house of worship for the community.

Dr. W. Russell Bowie, rector of Grace Church, preached the sermon, and the Rev. E. Felix Kloman, assistant, presented the candidate for ordination.

The Rev. Mr. Sperry has been Vicar of Grace Chapel since May, when he succeeded the Rev. Francis A. Sanborn. He is a graduate of General Theological Seminary, and before making a decision to enter the ministry, was engaged in business. He received a personal citation from General Pershing for his distinguished war service, and following the Armistice was Manager of the Casualty Office at General Headquarters in France. He was formerly Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce at Delray, Florida, and during that time was a Vestryman and Secretary-Treasurer of St. Paul's Mission.

The Rev. Andrew McCoy Van Dyke was advanced to the priesthood by the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Erie, on St. Andrew's Day, November 30, in St. Laurence Church, Osceola Mills, Pa. Mr. Van Dyke was presented by his father, the Very Rev. W. E. Van Dyke. The sermon was preached by the Bishop. Mr. Van Dyke is now priest in charge of the Clearfield County Missions, with residence at Osceola Mills.

Deaths.

Deaconess Beeson.

Deaconess Fannie Beeson, a worker in St. Andrew's Mission, Addystown, Ohio, the past thirty-five years, died November 15, in her seventy-eighth year.

The funeral service was conducted November 18, in St. Andrew's, by Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio, assisted by the Rev. Stephen H. Alling.

Deaconess Beeson was a native of Ironton, Ohio. Her early years were spent in Cincinnati and Washington, C. H., Ohio. She was set apart as deaconess by the late Bishop Vincent.

$433,435.26

To be collected by the Dioceses in December for the work of the general Church

Relying on pledges of members of the Church, the Dioceses notified the National Council to expect during 1935	$1,381,500.00
Up to December first the dioceses had remitted	948,064.74
Balance to be collected in December	$ 433,435.26

¶The National Council has appropriated every dollar of this money and confidently depends on you, the loyal members of the Church, to make good on your pledges.

¶Collections to December 1st this year are $106,950.36 greater than during the same period last year; however, they are only 68% of the amount pledged for the whole year.

SPECIAL NOTE

¶Several dioceses have found that the amount reported last January as their "Expectation" did not represent their ability and willingness to share the missionary task of the Church and have already overpaid the expected amount. It is hoped that many other dioceses will make the same discovery and do more than they expected.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

The sum of heresy is living in disregard of God.

"He who faces a day without God looks upon a forlorn struggle.

It is not the strength of our faith, but the strength of Christ that saves.
—Selected.

A missionary urge is an inevitable expression of living Christianity.

The Bible has been the Magna Charta of the poor and oppressed.
—Thomas Huxley.

"The charities that soothe and heal and bless
Are scattered at the feet of man like flowers."

The wireless message would not reach so far in the darkness if it did not go up to Heaven first.
—Hugh Redwood.

We never follow Christ to defeat, but to victory; never to smaller things, but to larger; never to a lower plane of character, but to a higher.

All the while, did we only see,
We walk in the Lord's own company;
We fight, but 'tis He who nerves our arm;
He turns the arrows, which else might harm,
And out of the storm He brings a calm.
—Selected.

It is little matter at what hour of the day
The righteous fall asleep. Death cannot come
To him untimely who has learned to die.
The less of this brief life, the more of Heaven;
The shorter time, the longer immortality.

It would be well for us if we could imitate that beautiful man of God, Bishop Whipple, who said, "For the last forty years I have been trying to see the features of Jesus Christ in every man that differs from me."
—Rev. Hubert Brooke.

"I have not lost a minute in worrying over the alleged conflict between the Church and science. There is no conflict," he asserted, "for truth will prevail, and truth will not damage the Church, but rather it will broaden one's conception of God's grace and power over the universe."

The Lord's Supper is not only a memorial before men, but a memorial before the angels, and before God Himself. Each time we come to the Lord's table should mark a new beginning of richer fellowship with Christ, of deeper spiritual life, of more abounding love for our fellow Christians. We feed by faith; as the bread and the fruit of the vine become part of our physical bodies, so do we really partake of Christ spiritually.—R. C. McQuilkin.

Of all the figures and metaphors employed in the Bible to describe what it does for the soul of man, I think this of the lantern and the light is the best. We do not carry lanterns by daylight. The Bible is not the sunlight; but it is what the Psalmist called it, "a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path" amid the shadows of this world.
—Dr. C. E. MacCartney.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

FOURTH SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

God Saves Everybody.

Mr. Editor:

One wonders why God is so often called upon to save the Church. It must be because of the value of the Church to the world. Recently there has appeared an article in one of the current magazines by a rector of an Episcopal Church. He is of the opinion that God alone can save the Church Almost everyone would agree that God alone can save the church. Upon reflection, I think it can be asserted that only God can save everything else and everybody. It seems strang in these days when all are crying for a "way out" the Christian Church should be singled out by a priest as the one thing in the world in need of salvation. Any one who knows history, knows the Church is some better than the time in which she lives. In every endeavor of life today men are "groping" for a better way to "carry on." The Church may be, in fact always has been, in need of salvation, so is everybody in every walk of life. Wherever men are, there is present the need of salvation. Suppose one turned the searchlight on the personalities of the leaders in the thousand and one endeavors of men today. The same weaknesses are evident that make even ministers of the gospel, fall short of what they might or ought to be What class of men today, has as a whole "lived up" to a profession of righteousness more truly that men in the ministry of the Christian Church? Most failures (so-called) in the ministry, have come about because of a lack of "fair dealing" in matters of relationship between servant and those served. To complain about a system does not involve the kind of men, who have become victims of a wrong procedure in Church government. There are many good men in the "banking" system today. Good men are found in "systems" of business and they can but carry on or starve. Concentration of power in the hands of the few is coming to be felt by many to be a wrong system, in so far as economic salvation is concerned. Destruction of what is—is no remedy for existing evils. The price Russia has paid is too high even to get rid of a corrupt government and Church as well. It is not just, that thousands should die because a few have abused privileges wrongly secured. Although great utilities in America have been exploited by corrupt individuals, the fact remains, public utilities, carried on for the good of the many, are of use and should not be destroyed. In the whole economic structure of society, to right wrongs, God is needed. The Church suffers from the weakness of men. There are "rotters" in the ministry as everywhere else. It is however "a mean bird that befouls his own nest." For 50 years the writer has lived in Church circles. met hundreds of clergymen, had dinned into his ears, the hardness of life in the ministry; never has he been able to discern in men of any other walk of life, higher values ordinarily attained. We must try, it is true, as Dean Bell of Providence would have us, to be men of one hundred per cent in the ministry, whether commissioned in the Episcopal, Roman Catholic or any other Church. In the last analysis it depends upon a man's relationship to God. Let us all pray to God not only to save the Church, but to save men in every walk of life.

Francis H. Richey.

And a Merry Christmas to All.

We have so much at Christmas time that tradition is hard to observe. Long ago in America we gave up efforts to have the yule log, but we have acquired many of the traditions of old England and in recent years, possibly because we have received many immigrants, other European customs have been called to our attention.

It has been said that Charles Dickens' "Christmas Carol" brought back to the mid-Victorians the lost art of what Christmas really could be. Certainly in America we can claim that Washington Irving, even earlier, called Americans back to a real sense of how beautiful Christmas customs are. Pioneers faced with hardships in working out the problems of settling in new and dangerous territory, could not very readily have the beauties of a beautiful season, and then there was a certain distrust in some religious quarters of a feast day that could easily assume pagan characteristics if not watched carefully. But we learn that Santa Claus, the more modern version of St. Nicholas, whose real day was December 6, was probably added by the early Dutch settlers in New York.

The Christmas tree, from our Druid ancestors via Germany, has also claimed a place of permanency. We have some devout readers of The Southern Churchman, who righteously are praying for the preservation of trees, and beg us to help discourage so much cutting in the name of Christmas. Perhaps with all of our modern science, we can make a synthetic tree that will give a perfect feeling of a tree and yet not destroy the works of God. But to us, Christmas without the tree is just an impossibility!

Fortunately there is a return to good taste in carols. Carols, originally were accompanied by a dance, or probably, more correctly, the dance was accompanied by carols. The Forward Movement has encouraged the increased use of a creche, and even gives us simple directions in the manufacture of one at home and with paste-board. Perhaps there will be families who will gather round the manger with its little figure of the Holy Family and sing carols. Many a beautiful lullaby has first been sung in families where the creche was centred and where there was a real babe to lull to sleep. But the tinkly tunes about Santa Claus are dying out in favor of the folk song carol, and it is all for the best.

We have, perhaps, a prejudice against the midnight service. Of course the time historically is a good one, but Christmas is a family day and good families where the children are little will be busy filling stockings and tired after the job is done. We are almost sorry that this service in many places has taken the place of the good old Morning Prayer when the whole family came and filled the family pew. And by the way, does anybody have Morning Prayer on Christmas any more? There was a time when it was thought religiously a much more suitable service for Christmas than Holy Communion—at least at the main service in the morning.

We wonder what will be the type of music sung most often this Christmas? Once there was a tendency to think that anything over-elaborate was appropriate. Simple tunes to simple hymns and cradle songs about the Child Who made all children beautiful, are much more festal. The Russians have some very exquisite Christmas hymns, and contrary to popular opinion, they are easy to sing.

But Christmas is a feast that never can lose its real meaning. The commercial interests may seem to gain control, and the football games may even hold sway, but always in our minds we know that it is the day in which God exhalted man to relationship with Him. Its story, ever simple but ever real, is the story of a babe, and the innocence and beauty of that story can never die. May we wish that real and true joy to all of our readers!

A Christmas Truce.

We remember a few years ago the Bishop of New York suggested in the midst of theological debate that a truce be called until after Christmas. May we humbly suggest that the matter of Bishop Torok be delayed until after the New Year begins?

Church and World Problems as Others See Them

Christmas the Miracle.

By Charles Henry Brent.

The following Christmas message was written by the late Right Rev. Charles Henry Brent, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Western New York, for publication in the Buffalo Courier-Express on December 25, 1926. It is reprinted here by permission of that newspaper.

The fertilizing river, Christmas, the greatest miracle in a world of miracles, flows carolling through the vineyards of the human race with strong, unhurrying tide. In itself it is so simple, the anniversary of a Baby's birth. Its influence is so amazing, the conversion of a selfish world to unselfishness. It glides with magic power. With its benediction it caresses the banks of time. Cities of Joy are enriched at its touch as it goes singing on its way; barren wastes are fructified; hardened hearts are softened. So full of loving motive is it that it would fain convert the toiling valleys of men into the smiling uplands of the Kingdom of God.

The first characteristic of Christmas is its winsome beauty. Its introduction to earth was with a mother's lullaby, an angelic chorus with pastoral homage and kindly gifts. As it began, so it continued its course—in royal beauty.

It awoke the hand of art so that the galleries of the world have as their choicest treasure, Madonna and Child. It charmed to life the poet's gift of song. Milton's Ode to the Nativity stands as the chief jewel in a corona of simple carols, and noble Christmas verse of and to Jesus Christ. His divine majesty does not obscure His human dearness and nearness.

"Sleep, little Baby, I love Thee
Sleep, little King, I am bending above Thee.
How should I know what to sing
Here in my arms as I swing Thee to sleep?
Hushaby low,
Rockaby so,
Kings may have wonderful jewels to bring,
Mother has only a kiss for her King!
Why should my singing so make me to weep?
Only I know that I love Thee, I love Thee,
Love Thee, my Little One, sleep."

—Alfred Noyes.

Around the manger-bed the theologies, the philosophies, the ethical speculations of the ages linger and circle, and out of the mystic Thing, which is God's Son, they weave their fabrics of thought. Faith, hope and love hover over the Babe. In Him they find drink to quench their thirst for God, vision to satisfy their yearning for the best, the heart's desire that catches us away from self, up into the glad heights of service to Him.

This is the creative wealth with which the Christmas river runs as it goes lilting through the ages, in full tide, offering of its riches to all who will to receive. How fitting that the joy-spot of the year should be a little Child! What other religion of the world has dared to make the birth of a Babe a chief festival in its calendar? Only an immortal Babe could create an immortal anniversary. Though He grew to taste the joys and sorrows of manhood, He is today still the Babe, for into and through His maturity He ever preserved, unsoiled and unspoiled, the beauty and power of His infancy and childhood. He came, bearing in Himself God's best, God's very best, God's self, God's very self. For why? That by His self-gift He might demonstrate the love which, because of our limitations of intellect, we cannot understand.

So Christmas is gift-day. Was there ever such an orgy of giving as now marks the perennially recurring feast! We shall not belittle the spirit of giving even if it is not all perfect. It is impossible to kill Christmas. Its Author was killed that Christmas might live. For one day in the year at any rate we cannot but think of others and show our thought by action. Christmas compels us. We cannot escape the fertilizing power of the insistent Christmas river. It performs the miracle annually on a self-seeking world and for the moment man lies on a high plane of unselfishness.

One laments for the little children who know no Christmas. The sob comes to my throat as I think of a single "empty stocking." It is the Child who set the Christmas river flowing, so that Christmas can be only for children in fact or children in heart and mind. One laments for those who have never learned to give from the compulsion of love or who give only to those who have. We pray the God of Christmas to awaken them.

A wee girl had a sick brother—sick unto death. The word went forth that "only a miracle could save him." Little sister pondered over the saying. Her duty became clear. Gathering together her precious pennies she laid them on the counter of a nearby store and said she wished to buy a miracle. "A what, my child?" said the clerk. "A miracle. I must have a miracle. I have a sick brother and they say only a miracle can save him." A big man standing by said to her: "Little one, I am a miracle. Take me to your brother." Hand in hand they went to the sick bed. The big man was a wise and skilled physician who became the miracle that saved her brother's life.

For us, if we only knew it, Christmas is the great World Miracle that can alone save our lives from ourselves, nationally not less than individually. It gives us the Christ. It weans us from selfish calculations, politically, industrially and personally. It emancipates us from fear. When every day is Christmas Day, so far as mutuality of giving goes, the world will not be far from the Kingdom of God.

Light in Darkness.

By Gardiner L. Tucker.

In darkness shone the Light that was the Life,
But darkness spurned the Light to comprehend,
And hated it, lest greed and lust and strife
Be bared by Light, if Light should darkness rend.

The world was made by Him, but when He came Into the world, its Maker it denied;
Unto His own came He, with Mater's name,
And that they were His own, His own belied.

The power that they might sons of God become
He gave who did receive Him, who were not Born of the flesh or blood of man, or from Man's will, but whom the will of God begot.

Word became flesh, and here among us dwelled,
And we His glory, grace and truth beheld.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

Why Christ Came Into the World

Christ came into the world, as at this time, not only to make God known to man, but to make man known to himself, that is, his real status in the sight of God when the great work of Redemption had been carried out. Sin had so marred and disfigured human nature that it needed God Himself in the Person of His Son, to reveal the possibilities of a perfect manhood. It is true that God had made man in His own image, that is, with a nature capable of being united to His own, and thus revealing, as it were in miniature, the divine character. But sin had obscured the divine image in man, save that at various times, and in certain outstanding personalities, those greater qualities which were inherent in human nature, shone out and blessed the world.

Christ Set Men Free to Aspire to Higher Things.

Christ came to set men free from sin and thus bring clearly to view the possibilities which man's nature was capable of attaining. For instance, the human mind was set free and enabled to attain to a fuller knowledge of God than had ever been possible before. In Christ, God was manifest in the flesh. This manifestation made it possible for men to know God as He really is, and what is more, to share in the knowledge of the divine purpose. This exaltation of the human mind is thus described by our Lord Himself, in His Great Intercessory Prayer, as follows:—"And this is life eternal, that they might know Thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

The Higher Road to Human Progress.

Here we have clearly set forth the higher road to human progress. It must be self-evident that no matter how great the advance made by the human mind in its mastery over nature, its greatest achievements must necessarily come from our increased knowledge of God and of His plan and purpose with regard to mankind. We must surely realize by this time that the mind of man has strayed far from the divine purpose in its inventions of poison gases and other methods created to destroy our fellow human beings, thus defeating and frustrating the ideal of human brotherhood given to us by Christ Himself. St. Paul, referring to himself and to his fellow Christians, wrote:—"But we have the mind of Christ." This can hardly be said now, even with regard to Christian people, since the first Christmas Message of Peace on Earth seems far from being realized after nearly two thousands years of waiting for its fulfilment.

The Way of Holiness.

But Christ not only came to set the mind of man free to rise on the wings of faith to the higher life of sharing in the knowledge of God and the divine purpose; He also came to reveal to us the sublime truth that being set free from sin we can share in the Holiness of God. And He Himself set us an example of how this can be done. In the Sermon on the Mount, He sets this wonderful ideal before us:—"Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This does not mean that perfection is attainable in this present life, but it does mean that we must aim at the perfect life, as revealed to us in Christ Himself, though we must feel as St. Paul did when he said:—"Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect."

The Work of the Spirit of Holiness.

We must not forget that this work of sanctification, that is, sharing in the Holiness of God, can only be attained through the work of the Holy Spirit within us, Who comes into our life for that very purpose. This is wonderfully and beautifully set forth by St. Paul, in writing to the Corinthians:—"But we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." Christians were called to be saints, at the beginning and if a large majority of them later had only obeyed the call and had become true followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, Christendom would not be in the condition it is in today. And if Christians of our generation would only obey the call, and aim at the perfect life, the world would soon be transformed and the heathen nations would see in it something to be desired rather than something to be distrusted, at any rate as it is represented to them by those who while bearing the Name of Christ, show no likeness to Him. Christ came into this world to show us a way of life which alone would make earth more like heaven and the Kingdom of God a reality.

The Supreme Motive.

There is one other reason why Christ came into the world on the first Christmas Day; it was to bring a new vital force to regenerate the life of mankind, and to bring men together in the bond of a fraternal relationship, which will eventually make them all one. This vital force is love, the most powerful, the noblest and purest of all the motives which govern mankind. In his vision of the New Jerusalem, which St. John saw on the Isle of Patmos, we are told:—"And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." Rev. 22:1. Near the end of this same chapter, we read:—"And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Here it would seem that we have represented to us the giving of the Life of God to be shared by man as a free gift. But the Life of God is Love, for God is Love. Here then we find God willing to give to the world that which will cleanse and purify human life and serve as the sovereign motive which will bring men's minds and hearts and lives into harmony with the Will of God. This was what Christ came into this world to bring about.

Christmas.

Lord, Thou didst come unto a world undone,
Born as a little child in Bethlehem;
And men knew not what Thou hadst done for them,
That night when Heaven and Bethlehem were one.

And still Thou comest unto us undone,
And with Thy Presence drivest out our fear,
And Thy pure Light proclaims that Thou art here,
That Heaven and earth within our hearts are one.

Lord, give Thyself through us to souls undone,
That we may bear Thy love and tenderness;
Thy many wandering ones to heal and bless,
That they may know that Heaven and earth are one.

Frederick W. Neve.

Christ is Born

By CAMPBELL GRAY,

Bishop of Northern Indiana and President of the Synod of the Province of the Mid-West.

> And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swadding clothes, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.—St. Luke 2:7.

THE WORLD WAS BUSY, travelling hither and yon, excited to a fever heat, nervous and restless, but it was not because the Lord of Glory, the Saviour of mankind, was about to be born. The world was busy with its own affairs. Everybody was to be taxed and must go to their own home town to register. Therefore the highways were crowded and the inns or hotels were filled.

Silently and unobserved Almighty God entered into the world and became incarnate in our human nature. Two humble and lowly saints and the dumb animals alone were present. The place was not a royal palace. His bed was not a jewelled cradle. The faithful, yet simple shepherds on the hillside were the first to whom the glad tidings were proclaimed and next to them were the scholar kings of the east whose recollected contemplation had schooled them to be of as humble a mind as the shepherds of Judea.

Whether it be the aged Simeon, watching unto prayer for the coming of the Lord's Christ or the saintly Hannah, constantly ministering in the temple; whether it be the unlearned fishermen of Galilee or the sons of Zebedee, kinsmen of the High Priest; whether it be Pharisee, learned Doctor of the Law, member of the Sanhedrin, Publican or sinner, none could receive Him except they became as little children.

It is the same today. We are much concerned with taxes. It is a matter that touches the necessities of life as well as our pleasures and amusements. It is the strongest factor in politics at home and commerce, and the possible revenue therefrom, enters largely into our international relationships abroad with the countries of the world, and causes wars and rumors of wars. We crowd out the Christ when our minds and hearts are filled with the affairs of the world. As Christmas comes around from year to year, the town and the city begin at the outset of Advent to take on a festive array, not because the Christ Child is coming but to attract the trade of the season—Advent, the time of penitence and prayer to prepare our hearts for the Christmas Feast. And Christmas Day arrives, turned rather into a holiday than a Holy Day. Instead of the festivities of the home centring around the worship of the Church, too often the reverse is true and if the worship of the Church is to find any place in the day it must be arranged conveniently so as not to interfere with the festivities of the home. Not only are our hearts too often filled with the business and the pleasures of the world, but also there are fears and nervous anxieties, when self is enthroned and there is no room for God in our hearts.

Constantly is the loving Christ seeking to be born in an humble heart. He enters, of course, into the life of the little child in His covenanted way in Holy Baptism, but that is but the beginning, the germ of life if we may so speak. As we grow in age we must grow in grace. As the Presiding Bishop says in The Revealing Christ: "The purpose of God to reveal Himself precedes every attempt to seek Him." We are too apt to forget the first part of the Angels' hymn, "Glory to God in the Highest." He came to reveal God to man and to bring to man salvation and eternal life. He came two thousands years ago with this two-fold purpose, which is of course one purpose and He has accomplished it for us once for all. What He has done for us must be brought about in us by the mighty working of His Holy Spirit. There was the first Advent. There is to be the last Advent. And there is the ever present coming into our hearts and lives. He calls us to turn to Him and prepare a place within for His abode.

> The dearest idol I have known,
> Whate'er that idol be,
> Help me to tear it from Thy throne,
> And worship only Thee.

As we follow in His footsteps, we learn of Him, for He is meek and lowly of heart and we shall find rest for our souls.

AND SO OUR LIFE of prayer and devotion and service should find its highest ecstatic expression on Christmas Day, when we come into His Holy Temple to obey His dying command and offer to the Father our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. He is there, outside of us, revealing, calling and we see Him face to face as we rightfully sing in another one of our hymns. We receive Him in our Christmas Communion. But it is necessary that we should respond to that grace thus bestowed. Nor is it sufficient for us merely to prepare a place for Him by our penitence, by having our hearts empty of the idols that would usurp His place. There must be an active nurturing of the life that He bestows. Not only is this true of our Christmas Communion but of all our sacramental and devotional life, of our daily prayers and our reading of His Holy Scriptures and our meditations thereon.

Our Lord said that He came that we might have life and that we might have it more abundantly. It is His gift that He bestows upon us, but we must nurture it and develop it. It is characteristic of life that it must either grow or decay. He gave His life and continues to give it. If we wish to keep it, we, too, will have to give it away. The only meaning of giving gifts at Christmas is that we have the greatest of all gifts entrusted into our hands to impart by Him Who is the Giver of all things.

Our authorized version of the Scriptures, in translating St. Luke's Gospel from the available Greek manuscripts, renders the latter part of the Angels' hymn as "on earth peace, good will to men." The Revised Version follows the Vulgate and gives us "on earth peace to men of good will." Bishop Gore says in his Commentary that this does not represent its real meaning. He says that it means "men in whom God is well pleased."

God is well pleased with a contrite heart. The Christian religion is the religion of peace and joy. But spiritual joy is quite different from what the world calls happiness. Real and lasting joy can come only out of the right kind of sorrow. There is a sorrow that leads to remorse and despair, like that of Judas and there is a sorrow that leads to penitence and hope, like St. Peter and brings joy and peace.

THE LOVING LORD JESUS came into a world of fears. In most of the accounts of the appearances of Angels to men, they come with the greeting, "Fear not," or "Be not afraid." To Zacharias, to Blessed Mary, to St. Joseph, to the Shepherds at Christmas and Easter at the tomb was this salutation given. Also is this true of Our Lord on the deep, in the boat and at Eastertide. The Christian religion is not fear but courageous and triumphant love. He never promised external peace, but, in the midst of troublous waves and turmoil without, ours is the peace of God that passeth understanding if we will but lay hold upon it

The Kingdom of God and the Second Coming of Christ

IV. Last Things

By CHARLES W. LOWRY, JR.,

Associate Professor of Systematic Divinity, Virginia Theological Seminary.

IN THREE PREVIOUS ARTICLES we have discussed the antecedents and background of the ideas of the Kingdom of God and the Second Coming of Christ, the situation with reference to these concepts in the New Testament, and the approach to the Kingdom of God today. In conclusion, we must consider specifically and from our present standpoint in time and knowledge the question of eschatology, or reasoned teaching about last things.

The judicious Hooker, the father of Anglican Divinity, in speaking of our thought about God, warns of the danger there is in the feeble brain of man wading far into the doings of the Most High. "He is above," says Hooker, "and we upon earth; therefore it behoveth our words to be wary and few." This is in general excellent counsel for the theologian; with regard to eschatology, it is particularly pertinent. Moreover we have, on the side of wariness and modesty in thinking on this theme, the example of the Son of God Himself. Christ as man shared the dominating expectancy of His time and His people; as God's Son and Messiah He was sure, as we are, that His role in final things would be a prominent one. Yet He is explicit in saying: "But of that day or that hour knoweth no one, not even the angels in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father" (Mark 13:32). Still it is important for us to think clearly and to say such things as we can in the light of Scripture, natural or scientific knowledge, and general probability.

The subject plan of eschatology really falls into two parts: the future of this planet including humanity and the question of personal survival or eternal life. In Greek thought the two things were separate. The Greek expected the eventual dissolution of the temporal world, to be followed however by another creative cycle, and so on to infinity. But his real interest from the religious standpoint was in the eternal or spiritual order which was outside time. The soul he felt was destined to return to the eternal homeland, whence it had its origin, leaving corrupt flesh and the transitory earth behind. From the Platonic philosophy, traditional Christian theology took over the concept of the natural immortality of the soul at the same time that it rejected the corresponding notion of the soul's pre-existence. Hebraic thought, on the other hand, tended closely to unite immortality and the future of the earth and of mankind. This grew out of the conception of resurrection, which in turn was a product of the Hebraic world-view. This view was never philosophical and never dualistic. Man was thought of as created and as rooted in the natural order, though he had qualities that marked him out as distinctive and the crown of creation:—one made in the image of God. But this did not carry with it the idea of immortality. We know now that it is only very late, and after the development of a concept of resurrection, that the Jew came to possess a full-bodied belief in personal survival of death. In our Lord's time the conservative, traditional party, the Sadducees, did not believe in the resurrection or in the life to come. Resurrection for the Jew meant very naturally bodily and fleshly revival; for I repeat the Jew never had a dual soul-body concept like the Greek. (He is here very modern: Cf. our common idea of a unitary psycho-physical organism.)

CHRISTIANITY INHERITED this idea of resurrection; and the fact that it furnished the intellectual frame or thought-form with which to express or convey the persistence of the living personality of Christ made it the more prominent in Christian thought from the beginning. It was linked with the return of the already risen Christ, as judge on the last or resurrection day, and with final things, namely, eternal reward for the righteous or saved and eternal punishment for the wicked or unsaved. This broadly was the eschatology adapted from Judaism and apocalyptically influenced primitive Christianity and taken over into traditional Christian theology. With it was merged the concept of the native immortality of the soul and a larger allowance for an intermediate state of all departed spirits or souls, eventually elaborated into the threefold medieval scheme of Hell, Purgatory, and Paradise.

With regard to the notion of a millennium or reign of the Christ for one thousand years, the idea appears in Jewish apocalyptic literature but is unimportant in the New Testament. The only passage setting it forth is Revelation 20:1-10. In the early Church not unnaturally there was considerable interest in this specific prophecy. A chronology was worked out according to which creation covered six periods of a thousand years each, corresponding to the six days of the creation narrative in Genesis. The Christ had come in the last of these and at the end of the total period (of 6,000 years) would come again to inaugurate a seventh mellennium or "Sabbath rest" for the people of God, including the righteous dead who would be raised. Calculations as to the probable year of such consummation were not unknown. But from an early time there was opposition to this literalism and unprofitable speculation. It culminated in St. Augustine, who put an end to millenarianism for centuries by teaching that the prophecy of Revelation referred to the present reign of Christ through His Church. Since A. D. 1000 and more especially since the Reformation, various "millennial" doctrines have broken out in sectarian Christianity where often uninstructed people have tried to base themselves completely upon the letter of Scripture. In America, perhaps particularly, such views have tended and still tend to flourish.

SO MUCH for the history and background. We must go on to face frankly the question of what we are to believe and to expect today. Are we to believe that souls or personalities wait in a disembodied state for thousands of years, to be reunited finally with the billions of bodies long ago reduced to the elements from whence they came and, with those who are still among the living, to appear as at a vast assize to somewhere in the air before Christ's judgment-seat? Are we to suppose that then, according to the division of the judgment, they depart into a spatial heaven and hell? For space is certainly implied in the literal resurrection of the body (or flesh). To ask such questions is to answer them, in all probability. Though we are much less dogmatic and more conscious of our ultimate ignorance than people were a generation or two ago, a very solid body of scientific evidence remains. And we cannot return, if we would, to a six thousand year order of time and a compact three-story universe. We have no choice but to enlarge our ideas and to accept for what it is, the pictorial and figurative element in Biblical and traditional eschatology, which it in turn inherits from Jewish apocalyptic.

Does this destroy or at least throw doubt upon the truth of the Christian revelation, which is given primarily in Holy Scripture, though it is necessary always to remember that, according to that book, faith is the gift of God and no one can really call Jesus Lord save by the Holy Spirit? I do not see how. The Christian view of immortality, at least as tested by the New Testament, is not basically a doctrine of man but of God. To live eternally is not a property which pertains naturally to man. It is the gift of God pertaining to those who love Him and are called according to His promise. The primary grounds of the immortal hope are faith in God and the resurrection of Christ. The case for faith in God remains very much where it was. It is not intellectually overwhelming; if it were, faith as a moral act would be overthrown. But it is a strong case. The evidence for the resurrection of Christ has not diminished at all. Basically it is the entire phenomenon of the Christ Church, and this becomes more impressive with every passing decade and century.

AND I LOOK for the Resurrection of the dead." This clause from the Nicene Creed sums up the view of immortality as involving a creative or recreative act of God and as the gift of God. This is the first article of essential Christian eschatology. The second is the doctrine implicit in the correlative phrase of the Apostles' Creed so-called: "The Resurrection of the body." We owe this translation of resurrectionem carnis to the Fathers of the English Book of Common Prayer. They evidently had something of the same difficulty we have with the concept of a literal flesh-resurrection. This probably is the explanation also of the more vague phrase of our Nicene Creed so-called, which is first found in a creed quoted by Epiphanius, Bishop of Salamis, in a work written about A. D. 374. And we know that St. Paul asserts it to be impossible that flesh and blood should inherit the Kingdom of God, in connection with the elaboration of his immensely suggestive and fruitful notion of a spiritual body (1 Cor. 15:35ff; Cf. Mark 12:23-25). Along this line we may and ought to interpret the phrase: resurrection of the body. So qualified, it denotes an essential idea. For the Christian view of eternal life is social. It envisages a "communion of saints," a perfected fellowship of the Holy Ghost. This would seem to require an organ of communication—of expression and reception—a body as well as spirit. This second central affirmation of Christian eschatology is conserved and fruitfully expressed in the words: "The Resurrection of the body."

"And the Life of the world to come." So the Nicene Creed ends. Here are two points: life and the world to come. The Apostles' Creed defines the life as everlasting. This adjective conveys something needful, and I have no desire to have it changed. Our minds are time-bound. We can make some progress in thinking time away, but I think only some. In the end we come back to time's essential reality for us. Everlasting is a time adjective. But we ought to bear in mind that there is another aspect to the case. This aspect is conveyed by the adjective eternal, which brings out (a) the note of quality or value and (b) the thought of "abidingness" or that which is beyond time and change, at least as we know these ministers of mortality. And eternal is the more accurate translation both of aeternus and of aionios.

THEN THERE IS "the world to come." This is the eternal or heavenly kingdom of which we spoke last week. It seems best, attending both to the sense of the New Testament as a whole and to scientific and general probabilities, to regard this as a realm beyond our spatio-temporal order which is even now a reality, rather than as a future consummation of the order we know.

The end of the world doubtless will come in time. All things will pass away as the sun grows cold and the good planet Earth becomes uninhabitable. Or the end may come more suddenly and more soon in some ecelestial traffic accident. But the Kingdom of heaven does not wait on the coming of such a cosmic event. It is even now at hand. And its present, overshadowing reality remains the ground of the Christian Gospel or Good News, as it continues to be the motive of the first words of that Evangel: "Repent ye." We are commanded to repent—which means to turn from evil, to learn to do well, to be renewed by the Holy Spirit, to live in all relations as Christ's followers, to love and fear God—not simply because this is a good thing. It is, but Christianity is much more than a system of self-evident ethical values. It is a message from God, the most high Ruler of this universe. And we are commanded to repent, because the Kingdom of heaven is at hand, because God is, and is holy and righteous as well as loving, and because He has appointed One who will judge both the living and the dead.

Thus Christianity not only has an eschatology, it is at its centre profoundly eschatological. It is a religion that speaks even now of last things. It is a doctrine of eternity and time, a message affirming their vital interrelation. It is this which constitutes the crisis of the individual soul here and now before God, and it is this which gives us hope of the redemption of history as well as faith that the highest things we know will not perish but will be preserved in an eternal order of value.

and possess it. But this peace is not an inactive thing. It is the harmony of perfect activity and life hid with Christ in God, hid as the coming of His life into the world was hidden, but with the power for the transforming of ourselves and for the transfiguration of the world.

On this Feast of the Nativity, may the Christ find in each of us an humble heart made ready and yearning, a fit place for Him to dwell and to reign and from which He may ever continue to reveal and to impart His great gift of the life and the love of God.

THERE WAS NO ROOM FOR THEM IN THE INN.

By Willoughby Reade.

Had he but known, the keeper of that inn
At Bethlehem, nineteen hundred years ago,
That toward his hostel came the mother blessed
Above all women, with the holy babe
Then waiting to be born—incarnate God;
He would have said to the sojourners there:
"Make way; give place to Joseph and the maid,
In our best chamber shall the child be born."

Had they but known, those people at the inn,
That ere the dawn should break in Syrian sky
The "Peace on earth, good will to men" would fall
From hosts of angels to the listening earth;
They would have bowed them at the Virgin's feet,
Crying: "Come in; our best for thee and Him;
No manger shall thy baby's cradle be."

Could we but know, we people at the inn
We call the world, where, with cold, selfish hearts
We crowd for place, and turn into the stall
Earth's weaker ones; where, with our purblind eyes
We see no good in lowly things—could we but know
The mysteries which God brings day by day
To birth; we, too, should cry: "Come in, come in,
And rule our lives, O Light, O Love, which lies Unknown to us as yet, within the Father's heart."

Christmas Customs, Old and New

By FRANCES REUBELT,
Tulsa, Oklahoma.

"Heap on the logs, the winds blow chill,
But let them whistle as they will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still."

So sang Sir Walter Scott, who loved all things that are good and true, and here follow a few other verses on Christmas cheer, translated from the beggar poet, Villon, who lived many centuries ago.

"Noel, Noel! the year is old,
When wild wolves live on wind and cold,
When folk hug close to blazing logs
That chase out frosts and mists and fogs."

THE OLD, pious story remains, persists in the hearts of men of all nations and languages and climes. Toward this picture rise all prayers, our most sacred and hallowed customs, the hopes and fears of all the years, those lovely traditions that time has gathered around it like the perfume of incense.

It is a blessed thing to know, to realize that these Christian customs, these old and sacred traditions, the heritage of the race, that have been handed down from age to age, have remained to us, in spite of materialism and irreverence, and that they have persisted and are still alive even in our troublous times.

When I speak of customs and traditions, I might add legends. And this I say advisedly. For connected with the Bible story have grown up with it or evolved therefrom or have been added to it many customs that are not Christian at all.

We know that in the lands of eternal snow the Eskimos at the time of the winter solstice have their great feasts, one whole village entertaining another. The ancient Romans had their Saturnalia at this season, when the slaves were free for a few days, when every one feasted and drank and made merry.

We Americans are evolving more and more a very beautiful, a very rich and wonderful Christmas-tide. Being descendants of the different countries of Europe, we have adopted customs from them all. We have Santa Claus, a derivation from St. Nicholas, from the Pennsylvania Dutch or from the old Holland Dutch or from the English. For, I believe, nearly all the countries of Europe acknowledge this old saint as the friend of little children and the bringer of gifts. Our Christmas tree is German and the custom of hanging up the stockings came over from old England.

Who does not feel younger, more reverent, more innocent, when evoking the names sacred to Christmas! Father Noel or Little Noel brings the gifts to the little French and Belgian child. In Germany, where Christmas has gathered about it the loveliest of customs and celebrations, it is Father Christmas or the Christ Child that brings the presents. Here we have made an awful corruption of that most sacred, most holy name. The Germans say "das Christkindlein", which means the "Christchild." And "Christkindlein" has become in the United States "Kriskringle," and I have even heard "old Kris."

BUT LET'S BE YOUNG AGAIN, very young and take a flying carpet journey to some foreign lands where the Christmas is different from ours in many ways. Where I have not been an eye witness, I shall be brief. Let's take down our Washington Irving and our Dickens for a full and lively description of the English Christmas, whence came our plum pudding and the roast pig with an apple in its mouth and those other gastronomic triumphs that Dickens especially describes with such unction. And not here as elsewhere that these good English squires and their families all went to church on Christmas morning and the carols had rung all over England the night before.

On our flying carpet we shall see Spain celebrating the great festival out of doors, filling the streets of village and town with the gayest of colors, as old and young join in the merry fandangos. There are spectacular religious processions, too, from church to church and from shrine to shrine. Or so the Spaniards celebrated, before the country had surrendered to the Socialists and Communists. In Italy there are marvelous processions and masses in the hundreds of churches with the best of music, and Italy also has sumptuous feasts. Especially is this true of Naples where a monstrous feast leads more than one Neapolitan to the land of dreams. The poor of Naples hoard for months for this Christmas feast and for the Easter feast. These two occasions make up for a whole year of frugal living. The archeologists and historian tell us that this is a very old custom, going back, indeed, to ancient Roman times, and invented by a philanthropy of sound psychology, but in which the Church must confess that the Christian faith and the Bible story have lost much of their purity.

In Sweden and Norway, Christmas is splendidly kept. Who would not like to take part in the church services and see the merrymaking in the Land of the Midnight Sun? Not so very long ago, less than a century, Christmas was preceded by a judiciary truce, and for a week or two before Christmas day, no sentences were pronounced, no executions took place. Today it is said the peasants crowd the churches. An old belief, a superstition many would name it, says that the first one back home from church will have the finest harvest. Every one tries to be first out of church and first on the road. The farmer lads play all kinds of tricks on one another. Horses are unhitched, axles unscrewed, other tricks are resorted to. So when the service is ended, no peasant dares enter his old carriage and drive off without first seeing that everything is all right with horses and vehicle. After due precautions there is a grand rush to get the lead in the race back to the farms. And because every one must be good and kind on Christmas day, they give their horses double rations and leave food for the birds.

In Serbia on Christmas Eve, the entire family that is firm and fit goes into the woods and there the male members of the clan help cut down a large log which the father blesses while singing a hymn. At dawn straw is spread in the house. The mother goes through every room, imitating the clucking of a hen and scattering grain. She thus by some folk lore formula gives a benediction, a blessing to hearth and home and farm. The log is by this time burning in the principal room, generally a combination of kitchen and dining-room. The father now cuts the Christmas cake of which a part is set aside for the poor. In the cake is always a coin and happy is the one who finds this, for it means the finder will be lucky all the year to come.

I HAVE RECENTLY spent two Christmases in Europe, one in France and the other in Germany.

In 1930, it was my good fortune to go to Jena, which is next door to Weimar, famous for its opera and theatre and much more so as the home of Goethe and Schiller for many years, and where these two poets are now at rest in the same coffin in the royal crypt of the Saxe-Weimar princes. This part of Germany is as Protestant as Grenoble is Roman Catholic. Jena is also one of Germany's greatest university cities, famous for its philosophers and scientists and theologians.

Here in Jena, in the center of one square, is a great bronze statue of Martin Luther standing with the open Bible in his hand. On another square, is a statue of Frederic the Mild, the friend of Luther, who, as the Elector of Saxony, took him prisoner to protect him from the Emperor, Charles V. Bordering this square is the Barenhof, Jena's principal hotel, and over the front is a tablet stating that on such and such a date Martin Luther was a guest there. Not far from Jena is Eisenach, where Luther lived and sang as a school boy in the Christmas carols on the street, just as the boys still do all over Germany. And on a mountain near Eienach is the Wartburg, that famous old castle which Wagner has made familiar to us in the opera Tannhauser, and where Luther was kept in friendly imprisonment and where the threw his inkstand at the devil, and translated the Bible into German. So many souvenir hunters have snipped bits of plaster from the wall stained by the ink, that the space is now roped off. So, you see, if I had tried, I could not have chosen a place more in contrast to Grenoble.

In Germany one begins to feel the Christmas spirit with the coming of Advent early in December or the last of November. The open markets have the evergreens for home and church and already in the florist's windows are great pots of poinsettias which the Germans call the "Weihnachtsstern," the "Christmas star." On the market place and in the shops are displayed those German toys made by the children of village and farm; stars, animals of all kinds, and especially those fat little Christmas angels, each with its musical instrument in its hands. These are used to decorate the Christmas trees and you can buy a whole orchestra of them. And early in December begin the Christmas carols and the Christmas band concerts on the streets. The little children, especially from the poorer families, dress up in funny clothes, come to your house and ask to sing and recite Advent poems. Then in your turn you are expected to give them food and clothing, fruits, candies, whatever you will. The Christmas in Jena that year of 1930 was said to be unusually gay. In all the confectioners' shops were to be seen those gingerbread houses with icing for roofs and with Hansel and Gretel and the wicked old witch. A custom I had not met with when I was in Germany before was in fashion this time. When the schools closed for the Christmas holidays every child received a cornucopia of cakes and candies and this cornucopia was often as tall as the child. These were presented at the schools but were paid for by the parents. The shops were everywhere full of gay Christmas things. When I asked why such display when I knew Germany was so poor, I received such answers. That Germany was on the brink of another revolution, of ruin. That the children might never see another Christmas, and such would be the case, if the Communists should come into power. So the parents everywhere were trying to give their children one beautiful Christmas that they might cherish in memory, should the revolution overturn the Christian government. And in the churches, Lutheran and Evangelical, which are almost the same, I heard the preachers say Sunday after Sunday: "This morning as you walked to church, you were probably insulted, even spat upon. This you may expect. You may even be called upon to die for your faith."

THE GERMANS have always had manger plays in their churches at Christmas time. These little plays are called "Krippenspiele." In Jena the Red Cross gave such a play in St. Michael's Church for the benefit of the poor. You paid according to your own wishes, but you had to pay something. The actors in the dress of their parts marched from the rear of this large church to the altar space or rather to the chancel, before which stood an enormous Christmas tree brilliantly lighted. The actors were arranged in this order: first the Archangel Gabriel, a young woman, wearing a long, flowing robe of white and with long white wings. She carried a staff with a gold star at the top. Behind her was another young girl representing the Virgin Mary in a red gown and covered from head to foot with a blue mantle or veil. Behind her walked Joseph, represented as an old man in brown peasant garb. Then came four shepherds in sheepskin coats and with cloth turbans on their heads. Next were three fat men, the innkeepers of Bethlehem. These wore big aprons to indicate their trade. And last of all was the star bearer. The whole company sang an old German Christmas carol as they marched to the raised platform and took their places. This play is very old, written in Middle High German, before Luther's day. It had been done into modern German in order to be understood. During the Middle Ages the Biblical plays were played all over Germany, as we know, and in fact all over Europe. The Reformation stopped them, all but the Passion Play in Oberammergau. Now they are coming into use again everywhere, I am glad to say.

In this play first the Archangel Gabriel sings the Annunciation Song, to which Mary replies. Then the Starbearer sings with Gabriel the song of the angels, "Peace on earth, good will to men." Mary and Joseph meanwhile have approached each of the innkeepers in turn and have been refused very rudely as the innkeepers say, "We have no room for poor folk." But one of them soon repents, the first one, who comes back, and offers them his stable, and thither they go to be welcomed first by the humble beasts of burden, man's constant friends, the ox and the ass. This we learn from the carols now sung.

The next scene is that of the shepherds. You must imagine them on the mountain side, guarding their sheep. There are no changes of scenery. In the old medieval drama much was left to the imagination as Shakespeare does. The shepherds tramp around, blowing on their fingers as if to keep warm. Finally they lie down and go to sleep and while asleep the angels voices are heard singing Gloria in excelsis. The shepherds wake up, call to one another, think they have dreamed. They discuss among themselves the heavenly vision and decide to go to Bethlehem.

Then comes the scene in the stable. The shepherds present their gifts and here the actors group themselves in a tableau that reminds one of some old Bible picture of the scene. The shepherds now join in a hymn of joy during which the procession forms again and the company retires to the rear of the church, singing as they go.

AT THE EUCKEN HOUSE I saw another such play given by young men and girls of the university. The Euckenhaus is a private residence where live Frau Eucken and her daughter. Dr. Eucken was a celebrated professor and writer of books on philosophy. A university fund enables Frau Eucken to keep open house for the foreign students. On Sunday and Wednesday night of each week they keep open house. Here one meets students from many lands, Chinese, Japanese, Siamese, Norwegians, Swedes, Danes, Swiss. Americans, North and South.

A short lecture is given on some topic of general interest. Then follows general conversation during which refreshments are served. Frau Eucken had this Christmas celebration for us foreigners on Christmas Eve. There was a great Christmas tree that reached the twenty-foot ceiling and decorated as only the Germans know how to decorate a Christmas tree. Each one of us received a very nice gift and presented with appropriate words. At the close of the evening every body gathered about the Christmas tree and sang, "O Tannenbaum," "Stille Nacht," and other Christmas hymns dear to the German heart.

Let me now pass on to you a message that Frau Eucken gave to me for all Americans. She said she wished she had the opportunity to lecture in the United States and tell the Americans of their duty to themselves and to all the rest of the world. She said America must be brought to feel and understand her obligations to herself and to all mankind. The war has left Germany crushed and now her culture is at a standstill, the country being conquered and overwhelmed with debt and poverty. Then she said England and France were also in a bad way, as we all know. But the neighbors of France were uneasy, especially Italy and Spain, on account of France's belligerent and aggressive attitude. Germany, of course, harassed by debt and unarmed and stricken, was worried but powerless. Then she told me: "America is rich, a young and virile young people, in a new land. It is the duty of all Americans to appreciate their obligations to their Creator and to their fellowmen. Americans should be the standard-bearers of civilization, of culture and of the Christian religion. The Americans are the hope of the world. They must not, they dare not disregard or shirk their responsibilities."

My Christmas was continued in Leipsic and Dresden where I saw those wonderful fairy plays and operas which are known only in Germany and are given primarily for the children and where the whole company at the close of the performance gather around a blazing Christmas tree and sing Christmas hymns. But I have no time to enlarge upon these. If you remember anything of my paper, I hope it will be the words of Frau Eucken, those solemn words of the widow of one of the greatest philosophers of modern times, in her message to one and all of us here in the United States.

LEISURE.

By Grace Noll Crowell.

I shall attend to my little errands of love
Early, this year,
So that the brief days before Christmas may be
Unhampered and clear
Of the fever of hurry. The breathless rushing that I
Have known in the past,
Shall not possess me. I shall be calm in my soul
And ready at last
For Christmas: "The Mass of the Christ." I shall kneel
And call out His name,
I shall take time to watch the beautiful light
Of a candle's flame;
I shall have leisure—I shall go out alone
From my roof and my door;
I shall not miss the silver silence of stars
As I have before;
And, oh, perhaps—If I stand there very still,
And very long—
I shall hear what the clamor of living has kept from me—
The angels' song!

HOLY FLAME: By Georgia Harkness. Bruce Humphries, Boston, Publishers. 1935. Price, $1.25.

A volume of poetry by a professor of philosophy who is also the author of "Conflicts in Religious Thought" and "John Calvin" is certainly deserving of attention. Miss Harkness, who is Professor of Philosophy at Elmira College, has given to us in this book of religious verse, which is more than pleasing, rhyme and pious sentiment. Out of a profound theological and philosophical knowledge, Miss Harkness has put into her poetry a religious depth and insight not always found in most so-called religious verse. Some of the poems deal with Old Testament themes and are full of prophetic insight and vigor. In these verses we find ourselves in the presence of the Creator God who labors in the making of nature and man, and the Redemptive God in travail with the dark sins of the social struggle and the weaknesses and sins in the recesses of the human heart. There are also cheerful songs about all things bright and beautiful; they sing the praises of the Lord in nature, in the glory of the commonplace, and in the unheralded lives of individuals. The volume takes its name from a sonnet about the ever-stirring vision of Isaiah.

THE HOLY CROSS: By Karl Tiedeman, O. H. C. Cloth. Pp. 100. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, New York City. Price, $1.

A book of devotion, well calculated to inspire a sense of the presence and activity of God in the daily life. This is the great need of the day. In a world seething with the ferment of a changing order, economically, socially and religiously, the distrust of any power interested in the affairs of a sick humanity is prone and at times audacious.

We heard the same cry during the great war, "Where is God?" "Why does not He do something to stop this carnage?" But God was in His heaven, "keeping watch upon His own."

This suggestive volume, presenting "Some Ideals of the Spiritual Life" is born of a heart that knows God and would have others obtain its own perspective and uplift. Rightly, it insists upon the Cross and its correlated sequences. Solely upon the sacrificial death, the victorious resurrection and the glorified life of the God-Man, is approach to the Father ordained. We have need of this emphasis. Too many are seeking the inner light and life by "some other way."

Of the chapters, we may note especially: "The Plan of God"; "The Realization of the Vision"; "The Way of the Cross"; "The Power of the Resurrection"; "The Work of the Holy Spirit" and the "Worship of God."

We would advise our readers to get the book for its inspirational and devotional value.

AN OUTLINE OF THE NEW TESTAMENT: By the Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, D. D., S. T. D. Art paper. Pp. 101. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Price, 25 cents.

This succinct treatise, envisioning the entire New Testament history, is commendable for use of busy folks who have to get things in tabloid form. The active man while aboard a train, the homekeeper, with but a few moments for reading at a time, all of us in our precious spare periods may find this contribution to the comprehension of the New Testament a stimulant to a fuller pursuit of this most important theme. Bishop Wilson puts us on the right track. He sees and apprehends the lack in our American life of the knowledge of the Word of God; and he hereby lays a stepping-stone to a richer acquisition of Scriptural culture.

THE HYMNAL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS: Published by D. Appleton-Century Company, Incorporated, New York. No price given.

This Hymnal contains the music and words of all the hymns loved and sung by children. It would be most valuable in primary or junior departments. The hymns have been selected and arranged so that they fill the needs of the child of today and the music is within the range of their voices. Some of the Church hymns have been included so that the children might become acquainted with them. L. L. C.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys

Provincial Program on Seven Steps of the Disciples' Way

Mrs. Henry J. MacMillan, President of the Woman's Auxiliary to the National Council in the Province of Sewanee, has written for this page an abbreviated report of a program presented at the Provincial Meeting. There is much suggestive material in Mrs. MacMillan's second and third paragraphs, and the Findings given are valuable as guides to meditation and action. Her account follows.

The program for the Provincial Meeting, Province of Sewanee, was based on the three year program, "Close to Christ and Forward With Him." The Auxiliary in this Province is definitely in line with the Forward Movement and all of the material the Commission has gotten out is being used. "The Seven Steps of the Disciples' Way" was used in the Provincial Meeting in order to show how it can be brought home to the individual and the organization. The Forward Movement has brought them forcibly in various ways to the minds of the members of the Church.

The series of talks published in "The Living Church" last summer on these objectives were splendid and deserve much more than a casual reading. As I went over them I wondered if we need to do more than take these meditations and study them, and I decided we do. We need not only to have different types of people make their own meditations on these objectives, but we need also to have demonstrated before our eyes practical examples of the way in which these objectives were claiming many of Christ's Disciples. We worked it out and it made an inspiring program. We used the Litany of the Disciples' Way and, of course, many of the prayers. Personally, I would like to feel that the Litany is being used wherever a group of the Auxiliary is meeting.

The method of conducting a school of prayer was given, and remarkable examples of the service women are rendering in our own province were reviewed. I hope through it all was felt the spirit of the United Thank Offering.

The Committee on Findings brought in a brief synopsis of each meditation and also one on the way of following as members of the Woman's Auxiliary. These follow:

"A Disciple Turns," by the Rt. Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, D. D.

To be a disciple one must have already turned. If he is to be a permanent disciple, he must turn from the world and be crucified with Jesus Christ. There are three aspects of a crucified life:

1. A surrendered life—when the will of Christ has become our will.
2. A life of prayer—true prayer enters the life of reality and sees God as He is and ourselves as we really are.
3. A life of joy—the Cross becomes the joy of life, the crown of love, the root of all happiness.

"A Disciple Follows," by Mrs. William Langley, representative of The Girl's Friendly Society.

If in our imagination, we will follow Christ through one of His Galilean days, we as disciples will come to realize that to take the Master's way means to follow Him all the way in all things and at all times, daily to make this the supreme purpose of our lives. Then we can go hand in hand with Him to overcome the world.

"A Disciple Learns," by Mrs. Beverly Sloan.

If we are to follow Christ, we as disciples, must learn to know Christ; to know Him not only as Master but as Teacher and Leader. We must seek silence every day, preferably in the early morning, before the rush and bustle of every day life, if we would absorb His spirit and allow Him to mould our lives.

"A Disciple Prays," by Miss Emma J. Hall, representative of the Daughters of the King.

Prayer is communion with God, by which we enter into partnership with Him. The Cross is the first requisite, it is the central phenomenon of religion, the mind and spirit to Calvary. How do we pray? In silence. When do we pray? Have a special time set apart each day. Prayer is not only for ourselves but for all the great company who call themselves Christians.

"A Disciple Serves," by Miss Elizabeth Matthews.

We should probably do less but improve the quality of our service. Three points should be stressed:

1. It must be a disciplined service.
2. It must be a united service. Some form of co-operation must be learned by the Church if it is to solve the problems in this generation. It must begin in the family and parish if it is to succeed between classes and races.
3. It must be an adventurous service. We must loose our life to keep it, and dare to do.

It can all be summed up in the third chapter of Colossians.

"A Disciple Worships," by Mr. Gordon Tucker, representative, Young People's Service League.

Worship should mean an act of devotion alone or in groups. Two tests of worship are: Prayer, meditation. Four steps in worship are:

1. Realization of God's Presence.
2. Setting up God's standards as our own.
3. Comparison with that ideal.
4. Determination to do His will.

"A Disciple Shares," by the Rt. Rev. Theodore Bratton, D. D.

"Holy offerings rich and rare," means not only the offerings of material gifts, but other holy offerings. Money is the sacrament of ourselves, and can be used in exchange for our life. Life is the eternal gift of the God who made us to know Him, to love Him, and to be like Him. Man was made to make himself, but this is impossible without God. Our striving is always to seek perfection in Him when we wake in the other world. All effort in life may be summed up in this: "That we may so completely know Him, that we may completely offer ourselves in Him, our souls and bodies." We can make not only the gift of life, but we can more and more share all our blessings with others as children of God and members of Christ.

By using our little Blue Boxes, by doing Christian social service work, supply work, Church Periodical Club work, and all other objectives of the Woman's Auxiliary, we are sharing with others and trying to be disciples of Jesus Christ.

MISSION KINDERGARTENS PROVE THEIR VALUE IN LEADING CHILDREN TO CHRIST.

Nara, Japan.—

Taro-chan is a little boy who has been coming to the Nara Kindergarten, which is under the supervision of Miss Margaret Hester. Some time ago Miss Hester told the following story of Taro-chan:

Taro-chan's father had died, but before he died he left strict injunction with his wife that Taro-chan should go to the Christian Kindergarten. Why this was is not known, as the father was not a Christian. In time Taro-chan's mother married again, but the family still lived with her mother. When the time came for little Taro-chan to go to kindergarten, his mother remembered his father's wishes, and sent him to our kindergarten there at Nara.

A Sick Child Learns to Pray.

Taro-chan's health had not been of the best, and he had been subject to many spells of illness, even more than the usual things that come to children. On the whole, he is a good little boy, but when sick had always been very irritable and fretful, and rather difficult to manage.

At kindergarten, Taro-chan was very happy, and often spoke at home of the many fascinating things he was learning day by day. Among these were Prayer and Christian Love. Then Taro-chan fell ill again, and his mother and grandmother was sorely grieved, for no matter what they did, he seemed no better. Especially did the grandmother grieve over the little boy until he, himself, was touched with pity for her. One day he said to her: "Grandmother, I wish you would pray for me to get well. I think if you would pray, maybe I would get better. I pray myself, but I can't do it all alone."

Grandmother Becomes a Seeker.

In telling this to Miss Hester, the grandmother said: "I do not know how to pray as he wanted me to, but I did want to try." The grandmother also told of how much less irritable Taro-chan was during this illness, that he seemed a different child since he had been attending kindergarten.

Because it all meant so much to Taro-chan, this faith in God and prayer of which he had learned in kindergarten, Taro-chan's grandmother has come asking to be told about Christianity.

Prayers of Thanksgiving.

Although Taro-chan and others like him in the kindergarten are very young children, they are not too young to learn and understand something of God's mercy and love for His children. One day the Japanese Kindergartner was talking with the children about thanking God for the blessings they had received. They promptly fell on their knees. Some were mentioning the small things that bring joy to childish hearts everywhere, but several seemed to think of more important things, and Taro-chan was one of these, for the kindergartner heard him thanking God for making him well, to which he added a prayer that one of his little kindergarten companions, ill at the time, might be made well.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

Prayer for Liberia.

O God, Who hast made of one blood all men for to dwell upon the face of the whole earth, we humbly beseech Thee graciously to behold and bless all our missionaries, far and wide, but more especially do we now pray for the Bishop elect of Liberia and all the workers in that difficult land. Defend them from all dangers of soul and body, and grant that both they and we, drawing nearer to Thee, may be bound together in Thy love, in the communion of Thy Holy Spirit, and in the fellowship of Thy saints; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHURCH ARMY OBSERVES EIGHTH ANNIVERSARY DECEMBER 8. NEW RECRUITS NEEDED.

Church Army observed its eighth anniversary on December 8 with a special service held at 11 A. M. at the Church of the Incarnation, with the rector, Rev. John Gass, as preacher.

During the past year, Church Army's most outstanding work has been in the South, in Alabama.

Captain C. L. Conder has been appointed director of the work centering in the House of Happiness near Scottsboro, Alabama. Between June and October this missionary presented twenty-five for baptism and twenty-one for confirmation. He conducted three preaching missions in Jackson and Marshall counties, held Bible schools at two points, had bi-weekly preaching at two stations, made 1,154 visits, held 141 indoor and twenty-two outdoor and forty children's services. In an entirely rural area, the total attendance was 9,535, or an average of forty-seven at 203 services.

A steady program of visiting, cottage meetings and brush arbor preaching missions is being planned.

A preaching tent ($500) is needed.

Church Army expects to send five more workers into the Tennessee Valley. This organization continues to call for recruits. Information from the Candiates Secretary, 414 East Fourteenth Street, New York, N. Y.

CENTENNIAL OF CHINA MISSION COMMEMORATED IN SHANGHAI WITH SPECIAL SERVICES.

Shanghai China.—

The China Mission is celebrating its centennial this year. Sunday, October 6, the day set for the special commemoration, was marked by appropriate services in all the churches. The diocesan celebration was held in the Church of Our Saviour, Shanghai, and, thanks to the new bus lines, many of the up-country clergy were able to attend after services in their own stations. The English Bishop of Chekiang was present with one of his presbyters, and there were also clergy from our other two American dioceses, while the sermon was preached by the Rt. Rev. Dr. Lindel Tsen, Bishop of Honan, formerly a presbyter in our Diocese of Hankow. The congregation of more than a thousand persons not only filled the church, but overflowed into the church yard. The singing was led by the joint choirs of all the Shanghai churches

Founder of the Church.

One hundred years is, after all, not a long time in the life of a Church. We are still very near the beginnings of Church life in China. There is now living in Shanghai at least one Chinese member of the Church who remembers Bishop Boone, the founder of the Church in China. The missionary life of our present Diocesan, Bishop Graves, covers more than half the century and his episcopate, forty-two of the one hundred years. It is not yet ninety years since the first Chinese member of our Church was baptized.

Oiling the Hinges.

The story is told of Bishop Boone that when he was a student at the Virginia Seminary, looking forward to going to China, his room-mate said to him: "But you can't go. China isn't open. It isn't possible." An edict had recently been issued making death the penalty for a Chinese who should venture to become a Christian. "Pinckney," he replied, "if by going to China and staying there the whole term of my natural life I could but oil the hinges of the door so that the next man who comes would be able to go in, I would be glad to go." He went out in 1837 to join the Rev. Henry Lockwood and the Rev. Francis R. Hanson, who, two years before, had begun work among the Chinese in Batavia on the Island of Java. Within two years both of his associates had been compelled by ill-health to retire from the work and he carried on alone till, in 1845, he returned from his first furlough as Bishop, bringing with him six fellow-workers.

Faith Justified.

One can but marvel at the patience of those first missionaries and the greatness of their faith. More than a decade before one Chinese accepted the message they brought! We who have followed them have entered into their labors and have seen their faith abundantly justified by the thousands of Chinese since those days of waiting who have heard the call, many of them now gone to their rest, but 10,000 living in this diocese alone; and by the fine body of Chinese clergy, including two bishops, whom the mission has raised up for the Church in China.

A Christmas Fantasy of the Hymnal

Characters: Ruth Churchman, Mrs. Churchman.

Pictures in costume: Aurelius Prudentius (a monk, costume, a cassock and a hood), Bishop St. Germanus (purple cassock and mitre), Charles Wesley (black coat and stock), Bishop Brooks (dark coat, dark tie), John Henry Hopkins (modern clerical).

Scene: Living room of Churchman house. Table with two chairs in foreground. A large portrait hangs on wall so arranged that picture can be taken out and replaced by living person showing shoulders, head and hat. Ruth and her mother are discovered seated. Both are reading.

Ruth (stops reading and looks at picture): I wish to goodness I could read something that had a story to it, instead of all this poetry we have to read for English. I hate poetry.

Mrs. Churchman: That is a strange remark for any one that likes music as much as you do. Don't you realize that music sprang from poetry. People told stories in a beautiful way with rhythm and rhyme. Then they set it to music.

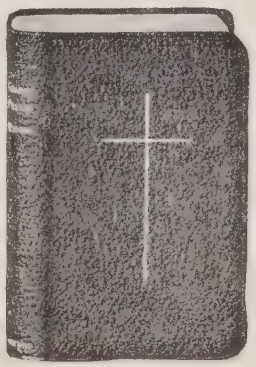
Ruth: I suppose that is true. But it is so hard to see the music in connection with a lot of poetry, especially religious poetry, like Milton's "Paradise Lost", that I am reading now.

Mrs. Churchman: Yes, "Paradise Lost" is hard to read, but there is a lot of religious poetry that is much easier than that, and much that you will really like. But I must go to bed, it is getting late. (She goes out.)

Ruth: I sure am sleepy. I guess I will doze a minute. (She puts her head on her arms on table. Lights go out. Picture is removed from frame and Aurelius Prudentius takes place of picture in frame. He hangs on the frame a placard: "Aurelius Prudentius of Spain, 348 A. D." Music of Hymn 74 is played through once. Lights go on. Ruth raises head.)

Ruth: I thought I heard music. It was Hymn No. 74 (she finds it in hymn book): "Of the Father's love begotten, Ere the worlds began to be." I wonder who wrote that.

Prudentius (holds hymnal in his hand and speaks from the picture): I am the author of that hymn, Ruth. I lived in far distant Spain in the early days of Christianity. For a time I wished to be a student and to go into politics, and was fairly successful. But after a while I decided that I was wasting my time, and went into the ministry, where I found the truest happiness, and so I wrote the hymn of which you have just heard the music. It tells of the glory of God's love for us, as shown in the Christmas story.



(He reads from hymn book.)

That was fifteen hundred years ago. But the Christmas story is ever new and ever glorious. So today you sing my hymn.

(Lights go out. Prudentius steps down and Germanus takes place. Under his picture is a placard: "Saint and Bishop Germanus of France, 450 A. D." Music of Hymn No. 82 is played. The lights go on.)

Ruth: Strange what dreams we have, but I thought that an old monk named Prudentius came and told me his story. But I must sleep. I thought I heard the music of Hymn No. 82, "A Great and Mighty Wonder". I wonder what story is behind that Germanus: I wrote that hymn, Ruth. It was in the days when France was being overrun with barbarians, and not only so, for Christian Britain was being invaded by the heathen Anglo-Saxons, and by even more terrible heretics. So they invited Bishop Lupus and me to come over and preach against the heretics. We went. The heretics decided to drive us from the country by force of arms, but the Church party rallied, though we were few. I told them not to fear, but to charge, crying "Alleluiah! Praise to God", as their battle cry. They did this and the heretics fled.

It was a great and mighty wonder. But the great and mighty wonder of the hymn I wrote was the most wonderful event in the history of the world, when God took human form on that first Christmas Day. (He reads from the hymn book which he holds in his hand Hymn 82.)

Ruth: Oh, that is one of my favorite hymns: "Hark! the Herald Angels Sing." I love it. By whom and when was that written?

Wesley: That was one of my many hymns, Ruth. You remember me, I am sure, for I was the brother of John Wesley, and we two were the founders of the Methodist Movement, though we were both so sorry it ever went out of Mother Church. I was born about 200 years ago, and the movement we started was one of the greatest spiritual movements England or the world ever saw. Our whole lives were given to proclaiming the Christmas message of the love of God in Christ. (He reads from hymnal which he holds in his hand Hymn 73.)

(Lights go out. Wesley steps down and Brooks takes place. Under him is placard: "Bishop Phillips Brooks, of Western Massachusetts, 1835-93." Music of Hymn No. 78 is played through. Lights go on.)

Ruth: Now we are coming to my real favorite, "Oh, Little Town of Bethlehem". Mother was telling me she once heard the author of that hymn preach. It was a Bishop. Oh! what was his name?

Brooks: Phillips Brooks is the name you wanted. For I am the author of that hymn. I was from Boston, and first decided to be a teacher. At that time I had not even been baptized. But when I failed at teaching a friend suggested to me that I go to the Virginia Seminary and see how I would like the ministry. There I truly accepted Christ as my Saviour and was trained for the ministry. After a number of happy years as a priest I was elected Bishop of Western Massachusetts. There I labored for only two years before I died.

Ruth: Oh yes, I know you now, for your picture is in my history as one of America's greatest preachers.

Brooks: That is very kind of you to remember that, I am sure. But, to return to the hymn. I hope you like it. I wrote it for young people, and I used to rather like it myself. (He reads from the hymnal the first verse of Hymn 78.)

(Lights go out. Brooks steps down and Hopkins takes his place. Under him is placard: "Rev. John Henry Hopkins, of Chicago, Vermont and South Florida, 1867—Present Day." Hymn No. 554 is played through. Lights go on.)

Ruth: "We Three Kings of the Orient Are." I remember that last year I took the part of Melchior in our pageant. That, too, is one of my favorites. Who can have been the author of that?

Hopkins: You ought to know, for if I am not greatly mistaken I had the pleasure of meeting you a few years ago in your home parish. Indeed, I am sure I know your rector, and your Bishop is a warm friend of mine. You see, I really belong to three dioceses. I am canonically resident in Chicago. But since I retired I live in the summer in Vermont, and come to South Florida as a rule in the winter. I usually help there a bit in Winter Park. In my travels about I have met most of the Bishops and many of the clergy.

I have lived a long life and it has been a happy one, and I like to think that I may have made others happy by preaching and by my writings. I am so glad you like my hymn. (He reads from hymnal the first verse of the Hymn 554.)

(Lights go out. Hopkins steps down and original picture goes into place. Lights go on again and Ruth is seen apparently asleep, head on arms.)

Mrs. Churchman (comes on stage and shakes Ruth by shoulder): Wake up, Ruth. It is awfully late. You must come to bed.

Ruth (rubbing her eyes): Yes, Mother, I am coming. Oh, Mother, I had the most wonderful dream. I dreamed that that picture there was of first one and then another of the authors of the Christmas hymns, and that they told me about the hymns they had written and about their lives. I will surely never again say that I do not like religious poetry.

COLLECT FOR THE FOURTH SUNDAY IN ADVENT.

O Lord, raise up, we pray Thee, Thy power, and come among us, and with great might succour us; that whereas, through our sins and wickedness, we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us, Thy bountiful grace and mercy may speedily help and deliver us; through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be honour and glory, world without end. Amen.

COLLECT FOR CHRISTMAS DAY.

Almighty God, Who hast given us Thy only begotten Son to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we being regenerate, and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same our Lord Jesus Christ, who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

"Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which has come to pass." (Luke 2:15.)

Arthur E. Smyth.

(1)

Mortals one and all arise,
Gaze ye up on yonder skies.
Lo! Behold the moving star
That the Magi saw afar.

(2)

In Bethlehem's lowly khan,
See the gift God gave to man!
So the midnight welkins rang,
As the herald angels sang.

(3)

Watchful shepherds in their plight
On Judea's tranquil night,
As the seraph did appear
With his host. He calmed their fear.

(4)

And when he their fears allayed,
To the fold their journey made.
They returned with joy to tell
Of the Child. Emanuel.

(5)

Unto us a Child is born,
On this happy Christmas morn.
On your bended knees behold
What the prophets had foretold!

(6)

Spread "good will" to men of peace.
Sing ye mortals, never cease.
We with angels too will sing
Sweet Hosannas, Christ is King.

(7)

From the manger to the cross
Was a vict'ry, not a loss.
"It is finished!" Thus He gave
All He had for man to save.

(8)

Glory to the Father be!
Glory blessed Trinity!
Let "Amen" be the refrain
'Til He comes to earth again.

Christmas Hope.

At all times Christmas makes a happy interruption into the strains of normal life. For a short period every one resolves to put his troubles on one side; every one tries to see what can be done for somebody else. The resultant happiness might well suggest that ordinary existence would be the richer if this practice became habitual. Somehow, it does not, and that perhaps is because even at Christmas-time many are content to accept it as a season of goodwill and kindly temper without coming into vital contact with the ultimate causes that have made Christmas to be. Good fellowship that springs from convention must fail to penetrate beneath the surface.

Christmas is a permanent source of rejuvenation because it rests upon a fact of substance, upon an event that subsequent reflection recognized as a new beginning of profound and unique significance. Jesus Christ being what He was, and the effect that He had never failed to produce and still produces upon the most diverse races and types of culture being what it is, the moment when this influence entered the world cannot fail to stir the imagination, and all the more so because the manner of that entry is a challenge to all preconceived notions concerning the origins of greatness. One does not look for kings to be born in stables. The contrast between the result and the beginning is in itself a stimulus to hope. There is no example in human history that more abundantly justifies the profound dictum of Aristotle: "The nature of man is not what he is born as, but what he is born for."

To outward seeming Jesus was born as the child of a mother of despised race, and even among that race one so unimportant that she was relegated to a dark and dismal outhouse. The more that men reflect on what He was born for, the more must it seem that what He was born as stands out in such startling contrast with the external circumstances of His birth, that it demands an interpretation of His origin utterly transcending not only those external circumstances, but also His human ancestry. Adequately to express the significance of that event compels recourse to paradox. The true joy of Christmas, the spirit of giving that endows the season with so lovely a quality, is inextricably bound up with the belief that it was the Maker of the earth and sky that took human sorrows and sins upon Himself when Jesus was born. While that conviction flourishes the grace of Christmas will flourish. If it were to fade, we should be left with a mere Santa Claus that yearly grew more futile.

Thus to get down to bedrock is now more necessary than ever it was, because the unfailing vitality of the Christmas message has a special contribution to make to the needs of the time. There are many circumstances today that induce gloom and a tendency to despair. In the material order the passing of a supplementary estimate to provide for the unemployed is a reminder that no real diminution has been possible in the unhappy army of the workless, and also that the provision of what is needed to save them from starvation can only be provided at great risk to the finances of the nation. It is now widely recognized that unemployment everywhere is just the outward sign of a world that lacks confidence to trade, a world of starvation in the midst of plenty, a world in which nations increasingly shut themselves within high national barriers and demand from one another impossible payment, and refuse to abandon the armaments that are one of the principal causes of fear and mistrust that hag-ride the world. But the very recognition of these things is a ground of hope. If a broad view be taken there are signs that grim necessity is proving once again the great educator. There have been vast changes of thought in the past year. A new readiness to abandon prejudices and face facts is appearing. One of the most welcome of the changes is the great turn-over that has taken place in regard to disarmament as a guarantee of peace. The English people are solidly for it; in France opinion is at least changing; in Germany the militarists have tried to seize power and have failed; the smaller nations are for it to a man; Russia shows by her correct relation to the Sino-Japanese conflict that she has no intention of stirring up a war. The crisis in the debts question is wholly to the good, and the next six months must see a great change in American opinion. Everywhere national problems are seen as world problems.

There is thus a new opportunity of proclaiming the Christmas Gospel. In the darkness a light is shining. Christ came to teach the unity of mankind, and to give the power to bring it about. His spirit has to wrestle with the selfishness and blindness of men, but He never ceases His work. It is that spirit that chiefly informs the growing desire to promote the well-being of our neighbors. The message of Christmas gives solidarity to this desire because it proclaims the good news that God cared enough to come down utterly to men's needs and sorrows. It provides a key to the travail of the mind by showing what that surrender has accomplished. It satisfies the need for communion with the Most High by opening a way for every soul to the source of strength. It is the pledge that all who share in the great undertaking that began at Bethlehem can press it forward to its certain and transcendent end.—Guardian.

For the Southern Churchman.

"DE NATIVATATE DOMINI."

Translated from the Latin.
Leavitt C. Sherburne.

"Puer natus in Bethlehem
Unde gaudet Jerusalem."

A Child is born in Bethlehem—
Glad tidings for Jerusadem!

His cradle must a manger be,
Who reign our King eternally.

Both ox and ass, with one accord,
Behold in Him their common Lord.

From Sheba royal Magi bring
Their costly presents for the King.

Thy cross the Holy threshold o'er,
That each His Sovereign may adore.

Though from the Serpent's wounding free,
Still of our race and blood is He.

Our fleshly nature born to share,
Yet stainless He,—beyond compare.

And thus the Saviour comes, that we Might like Him and His Father be.

This day, let us glad voices raise,
Bless our Dear Lord, and sing His praise.

Praise to the Holy Blessed Three,
And thanks to God the Father be.

THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

I know you're in the house;
I know you are in there;
I feel the green and breathing
All around the air.
I know you're safe and warm;
I know you're very near.
Oh, darling Tree,
Do you hear?

I promised not to look
(The way I did before),
But I can hear you purring—
Purring, thorugh the door:
A green, soft, purring;
Just as if you knew:
Everybody here
Loves you.

Don't feel lonely,
Now you are in-doors,—
Wait for the shining things
Tomorrow,—all yours!

Christmas Secrets.

Everybody said it was such a pity that Rosemary's father and mother should have to go away just at Christmas time and leave her to spend her Christmas with Cousin Emily.

Rosemary's parents had a lovely home with all sorts of beautiful things in it, and every Christmas she had a wonderful Christmas tree all to herself with just everything interesting and pretty on it that any child could think up if she tried a whole week. You see, her parents were rich and lived in a big house, while her Cousin Emily was just a plain little brown-haired school teacher, who lived in a small brown house not far from the big brick schoolhouse. With her lived her white-haired mother, a little Mexican maid who helped with the work, one little gray kitten, and one big brown-and-white collie dog.

The little white-haired mother didn't walk about very much, but had to sit most of the time in a chair by the window. If there should be snow on the ground she would always feed the birds outside her window and then watch them there, and always she would smile and wave at the school children going by to school or maybe coming home from school.

She seemed very happy, and Rosemary soon learned to love her; so, of course, she planned some sort of Christmas present for her. She thought something she could make would be nice; so she made a dainty knitting bag out of some scraps that Cousin Emily found for her. For Cousin Emily she made a pretty handkerchief, and for the little Mexican maid she bought a nice pair of stockings. Her packages made lovely Christmas secrets, and she often went to the drawer and took them out to look at them and think how pleasant it was going to be to give them on Christmas morning.

Cousin Emily had said that of course Rosemary's parents would send money for her to spend for Christmas, and of course they would send packages for her; but no money came and no packages came. Her father's brother, to whose home they had gone, was very sick, and maybe they did not have a chance to send things.

Rosemary thought she would be terribly lonely and disappointed, but she was not very much. She had her "give-away" packages to think about. She even made a little gray blanket for the gray kitty and planned to fix Shep, the collie, a nice Christmas dinner.

Then the very first thing Christmas morning she brought out her Christmas secrets and gave them away, and everybody was so pleased and happy that she herself almost danced for joy. Then Cousin Emily gave her a nice new book to read, Cousin Emily's mother gave her a dainty little apron that she could wear when she helped to set the table, and the little Mexican maid gave her a pretty piece of stamped linen that she could work with her own fingers.

She liked every one of her gifts, but before she had time to think about them very much Cousin Emily began sending her places. First, she sent her to the McGuires with a plate of animal cookies. The little gray McGuire house was simply running over with children, and when Rosemary knocked at their door they almost tumbled over each other, all trying to get to the door at once.

"We fought it wath Thanta Clauth," lisped the least McGuire.

"And so it is," laughed Mrs. McGuire, "for will you be looking at the plate of cookies she brought?"

Then Mrs. McGuire said they would play a game with the cookies; so every one stood around with closed eyes and listened while Mrs. McGuire described the animals the cookies represented, and every time she described one, all had a chance to guess what it was. She said so many funny things and they all laughed so much Rosemary could hardly talk for laughing. But still she guessed so many of them that Mrs. McGuire told her she had better quit a while and give the others a chance. She stayed at the McGuires long enough to have a wonderful time, and when she got back Cousin Emily was ready with more packages for her to take.

There was a warm shawl for the little old lady who lived across the street, a book for the crippled man who lived two doors away, and a carving set for Jimmy Allen, who had been sick and could not yet go out to play. There was something for just every sick or crippled or lonely person on that street, and Rosemary's eyes were shining like stars by the time she came home from her errands.

By that time dinner was ready, and then after dinner Cousin Emily told her to come and see the Christmas tree. They went to the window, where the white-haired mother always sat, and just outside her window was a little evergreen tree growing in the ground, but all dressed up as a Christmas tree for the birds. It had seed and suet and crackers and cranberries and other things birds like all fixed so the birds could find them. There were red birds and yellow birds and gray and brown birds all hopping about, chirping cheerfully and helping themselves to their Christmas treat. Rosemary could hardly tear herself away from that window all the afternoon, she enjoyed the bird company so much.

That night her Cousin Emily said she was sure that the packages for Rosemary would come the next day, but Rosemary laughed and said it didn't matter at all. "I have found out some Christmas secrets, Cousin Emily," she said happily, "and that is that your 'give-away' things make you just as happy as the things you get given to you. I have had the nicest kind of a Christmas, and I thank you all."

It was a nice Christmas secret for Rosemary to find ont, and when her packages came the next day she was very careful to share her presents with others.—Francis M. Morton, in The Christian Advocate.

Why Dorothy Waited.

Part I.

Eleanor Hammersmith.

Grampa Louie, also known as Grampa Fixit, was in his workshop, and his workshop was really the kitchen, bright and sunny, with flowered curtains and a canary near one window singing as though his heart would burst. A huge, old-fashioned wood stove took up one entire wall; there was a teakettle of water simmering loudly at the back, and the canary seemed to be trying to sing in tune.

Grampa Louie stood beside the long wooden table which had been scrubbed so much that it was fairly white. He was working on the badly dented arms and legs of a tin soldier when suddenly the outer door opened, and he heard flying feet on the porch. Meta, his wife, known as "Gramma Meta" to all the children of the neighborhood, went to the door, and there stood a little girl holding a large, blanket-wrapped bundle.

"Please, Grampa, my baby's had a bad fall," the child explained, trying to keep a quiver out of her voice.

"But, Louie, bring her in—she shouldn't stand so—in the door. Come in, child, come in." The white-haired little lady put her arm around the girl and drew her in. "Grampa Fixit'll be looking after the baby right away, eh, Louie?"

"Sure enough, and show her Patsy, Meta; her head was broken just like this one, right across the top."

"Come here, little one." Gramma led her into a sitting room brightened by a huge stove, its red glow casting ruddy shadows on the carpet around it. In a rocking chair by the window sat a big doll dressed in a warm white sweater and cap. "This is Patsy. What is your name, child?"

"Marie. Can I hold Patsy? My baby's name is Dorothy. Oh, whose are these?" She ran across the room and stood in front of a row of four more dolls sitting together on the sofa, each one leaning against a large embroidered cushion. The first one was wearing a little rose-colored suit trimmed with glass buttons and dainty white lace, with a broad brimmed hat to match; the middle two were dressed in snow suits and looked ready for a skiing or skating party, and they must have been rather warm so near the fire. The one on the right-hand end was dressed like a little princess in blue silk and silver lace; even her tiny slippers were silver, and she wore a blue band on her lovely black curls, but her dress was wrinkled a bit, and she looked as though she had possibly been there for a long time.

Above the four dolls, as though with amused dignity or half severity, a pair of old-fashioned portraits looked down, the woman's lovely, serious face lightened by an almost hidden smile in her eyes which seemed to say that she, too, had loved dolls many years ago and had passed this love on to the old man of the work shop, who, with his wife, loved the dolls of many children.

"You see, they're comfy here on the cushions. These two have been here a long time—the little girls can't pay Grampa yet. He can't always work for nothing, either."

Marie picked up each one of the dolls for a minute. "But the little girls will come some time, won't they? They must be terribly lonesome," she said as she put the last one back lovingly. "I couldn't wait for Dorothy so long. I need her every day, but I can pay—if it isn't too much."

"Come in here; I show you some new hats we just got in from Germany." Gramma Meta led the way into a little back room, but just then a loud knock came at the front door, and as she turned back and opened it a tall, beautifully dressed lady stepped in.

"Pardon me, have you seen a little—why, yes, there you are, Marie. They told me you'd come here. What on earth! Have you completely forgotten that we're taking the four o'clock train? Come, right away."

"But, Auntie, Grampa Louie's fixing Dorothy. I can't go without her. Wait."

"We can't wait a second longer. It's nonsense to have that old doll fixed. You can get a new one in Chicago."

"But I want her."

"Now, Marie, don't be so babyish; it's only that old doll you've had for ages. Come, dear, don't cry about it. I said I'll get you a lovely new one, and maybe we can even come back here later on."

"But, Auntie, it's Dorothy."

They had gotten as far as the door. "Don't cry so, Marie." Her aunt took her hand and stopped to turn back for just a second as they went out. "Don't bother with that old doll," she said. "Either give or throw it away. I'll buy her ten more."

When the door had closed the little old lady picked up Patsy from the rocker and sat there, holding her in her lap, looking at her round smiling face. "How can she take the little girl away, Patsy? And Dorothy will be lonely for her too; you'll have to keep her company," she said to the four dolls in a row.

"I'll just be fixing the curls a bit while the head is—why, Meta, what's the matter? What's become of the little girl?" Grampa Louie stopped short in the doorway as he saw the tears in Gramma's eyes; he had on his spectacles and his pipe in his mouth and a tiny curling iron in one hand.

"Ah, Louie, and she took the little girl away, and she was crying her heart out. The doll—to give it away or sell it, she said."

"'Pshaw, she'll be back. We'll get the doll fixed up; come help me with the curling."

By afternoon Dorothy was ready, her broken head so marvelously repaired that scarcely a flaw could be detected, and the beautiful curls around her smiling face gave her an entirely new loveliness. She was seated on the sofa beside the other dolls, and all night and all the next day the old-fashioned portraits in the heavy gilt frames looked down at her, and she stared straight ahead at the round table with its fringed cover, the dish of pink and white peppermints, and beyond, at the little stand with its bowl of gold fish and four rows of photographs.

In the evening Gramma introduced her to all the photographs. "This is Lydia; she's in Iowa teaching school. And this is Charles—he looks a lot like his Uncle Louie. And Mary, she's the girl who always has a smile. And Billy—but you get tired, dearie. I just want to amuse you."

By the end of that week the other dolls had been called for and taken home, but Dorothy continued to sit on the sofa, staring straight ahead with her round blue eyes, uncomplaining and patient.

(To be concluded.)

CHRISTMAS LOVE.

Kathleen Hay.

Christmas through the world to-day,
Shining everywhere!
Love and joy and peace—good-will,
Broadcast far and near.

Round and round and round the world,
May the message spread,
Till each one, each boy and girl
To the manger led,—

Feel the touch of His great love,
Find the Gift divine,
Kneel in praise and rapture there,
At the Gift sublime!

Christmas through the world to-day,
Shining everywhere,—
"Hark, the Herald angels sing . . ."
Once again we hear!

When Was Jesus Born?

When was Jesus born? Tradition answers, December 25, 1 A. D. Scholarship says, we do not know. It does not seem to be possible to date with definiteness the birth of Jesus, but scholars are pretty well agreed within limits.

The birth of Jesus was the pivotal event in the world's history. It is fitting that we should date all events from his birth. In the middle of the sixth century of our era a Roman abbot, Dionysius Exiguus, originated our calendar. He fixed upon the year of Rome, 754, as the year in which Jesus was born. He called that 1 A. D. In this he undoubtedly was mistaken.

Jesus was born shortly before the death of Herod (Matt. 2:19). Herod died just before the passover on April 12, 750 (Josephus) or 4 B. C. The events of the nativity occur before that date and require at least several months. Thus Jesus was born toward the end of 5 B. C. or at the beginning of 4 B. C.

We know that Jesus was born during the census of Quirinius (Luke 2:2). This is of little value, for the decree went forth in 8 B. C., but was not carried out in Judaea at once. Herod had troubles that gave him no leisure until 5 B. C. The census was probably not begun in Judaea until about that time.

Jesus begins His public ministry when He is thirty years old (Luke 3:23). Shortly thereafter we have the statement by the Jews that the temple was "forty and six years in building" (John 2:20). The rebuilding of the temple was begun in 20 B. C. If forty-six years have passed we are brought to 26 A. D. Further, John the Baptist begins his ministry in "the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar" (Luke 3:1). Tiberius was associated with Augustus in the empire in 11 A. D.; this coincides with 26 A. D. If in this year Jesus was just thirty years old, He was born perhaps toward the end of 5 B. C.—Ex.

"Praying Always."

As one reads the New Testament he is impressed by the frequency with which the writers break forth into prayers of praise. Often they seem scarcely aware that their language has passed into prayer. Nor does the reader until he pauses to meditate upon what he has read. Is not this what the apostle means by his term, "praying always"? To be always in that attitude that leads one inadvertently into praise and thanksgiving? Through such a spirit the humblest tasks of life are ennobled and life itself is filled with that radiant peace which ever accompanies the consciousness of His presence.

Radiant Star of Bethlehem,
Thy glorious, shining light
Sheds silent benediction
Over all the world tonight.

In the chancel of the heavens
Angel choirs sing
Glad and joyous anthems
To the New Born King.

Beauteous Star of Bethlehem,
In wondrous mystic beaming,
Thou sheddest messages of love
While the world lies dreaming.

O, most Holy Star of Bethlehem,
Bright watchman of the night,
Shed peace on earth, good will towards men,
By thy blessed light.

O, glorious Star of Bethlehem,
Triumphant skies adorning,
Shine over all the world tonight,
And bless the Christmas Morning.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

PRESIDENT OF NATIONAL COUNCIL MAKES REPORT ON CONCLUSION OF FIRST YEAR OF OFFICE

With this session of the National Council, Bishop Cook concluded the first year of his service as President of the National Council, an office to which he was unanimously elected by General Convention at Atlantic City, in his absence, and despite a formal declaration to the Presiding Bishop in advance of that gathering, that he could not consider re-election as Vice-President, which office he had held since December, 1933, in succession to the late Bishop Burleson.

Reminded of the anniversary, Bishop Cook reiterated his opinion that the present form of organization is not a wise one and that he hopes General Convention at Cincinnati will think the problem through again and make other adjustment.

"Meantime," he said, "I have found very great pleasure indeed in my association with the staff at Church Missions House and my contact with the world work of the Church. I have been convinced anew of the genuine interest in the cause of missions among us and of the prompt and generous response that has been made when particular necessities have been presented to our people. We have passed through, indeed are passing through grave times. We hope that with improving economic conditions there will be prompt improvement in our missionary activities in parish, diocese, and throughout what we call, for lack of a better name, the General Church. While we wait this better day I am deeply impressed with the loyal readiness of our workers at home and abroad to accept reduced and often completely inadequate remuneration for their work. My fellow workers and I at Church Missions House are not wrapped up solely in our own problems but we enter with whole-hearted interest and sympathy into similar problems confronting every Bishop indeed all of our clergy and other workers. A pleasant feature of my work has been to make this clear.

"The session of National Council just closed has been a fruitful one. While a vast volume of technical business has been transacted we have continued a policy by which major issues have been freely discussed. We have a new conception of the promotional problem and greater knowledge of the responsibility of the Church to youth and of the attitude of youth toward the Church. I believe that in the future, profit will accrue from this approach, even though no final legislation in either field has been possible.

"We certainly have profited by the new system through which every item of business to be presented to the National Council has first had not only consideration by the interested Department but a hearing before the whole group of our Executive Officers. The result has been much clearer presentation, much keener appreciation of problems involved, and in the long run far wiser legislation. The range of work covered is literally too enormous to be covered in the utmost detail by everybody, but this progressive study and consideration certainly makes all of us more generally acquainted with all of the work and more fully prepared correctly to informed and wisely to guide the Council.

"We earnestly look forward to support in the tremendous task of closing the present distressing gap between the total of our Emergency Budget and the sums which now seem to be in sight for 1936. I shall join Bishop Perry in an earnest effort to secure such further giving as shall prevent what might seem a year of disaster.

"A fine spirit of courage marked every moment of the sessions of the National Council which have just brought our first year of the new triennium to a close. We shall hope that this spirit shall spread throughout the Church."

BISHOP PERRY'S REPLY TO LETTER FROM BISHOPS MANNING, MANN AND WARD.

The Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, D. D., Presiding Bishop, in a brief letter to the Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York; the Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., Bishop of Pittsburgh; and the Rt. Rev. John C. Ward, D. D., Bishop of Erie, mailed to the Bishops and made public to the press recently, acknowledged receipt of a communication signed by the Bishops of New York, Pittsburgh, and Erie, and referred to the relations now existing between the Rt. Rev. Dr. John Torok and the Diocese of Eau Claire, Wisconsin.

Bishop Perry expresses appreciation of the concern manifested by the Bishops and informs them that he has communicated the letter of protest to the Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, D. D., Bishop of Eau Claire, "with whom," says the Presiding Bishop, "there was left the question of his (Torok) status." Bishop Perry's letter follows:

My dear Bishop Manning:

On my return yesterday from the Pacific Coast to Washington and New York, I received the letter signed by you and the Bishops of Pittsburgh and of Erie presenting a protest concerning the action of the Bishop of Eau Claire in receiving Dr. John Torok as a "Bishop in the American Episcopal Church, at a service in the Cathedral Church of the Diocese of Eau Claire on Sunday, November 17."

I can appreciate the concern which you and others have felt regarding a matter which has caused so much perplexity and difficulty during the past two years. All who are engaged in the consideration of it unquestionably desire to reach a conclusion conducive to the well-being of the Church and in conformity with its policy and legislation.

I have communicated your letter of protest to the Bishop of Eau Claire with whom as Bishop of the Diocese in which Dr. Torok is canonically resident there was left the question of his status when the Bishops, meeting in Houston, had heard the report of the Special Committee on the subject and had refrained from making official record of it or taking action thereon.

Faithfully yours,
Presiding Bishop.

FORWARD MOVEMENT NEWS.

Cambridge, Mass.—A Forward Movement program for the next three years has been adopted by Christ Church here.

The plan is divided into the seven steps of Discipleship: turn, follow, learn, pray, serve, worship, and share. Under each step is set down the distinct things which it is hoped the parish can accomplish within three years.

Aims are given as to the drawing of people to Christ, confirmations, attendance at Sunday school and special courses, at the Service of Meditation, Grace before meals, work among the students, increased attendance at service, an increase in giving, and an improvement in the church property.

The plan is one that well might be followed by other parishes, and on a larger scale by dioceses. Bishop Hobson, chairman of the Forward Movement Commission, praised the program.

Copies of the program, attractively printed in booklet form under the title "A Fascinating Religious Project," may be secured from the Rev. C. Leslie Glenn, rector.

Charlotte, N. C.—The Forward Movement was presented in the Diocese of North Carolina under the auspices of the Diocesan Field Department by the Rev. A. M. Sherman in an extensive tour in November covering many of the parishes and Missions in the western part of the Diocese.

Daily meetings were held in a central parish and other parishes and missions in the neighborhood were invited to attend. The usual program was a luncheon meeting at noon in one place and a supper or church gathering in another place in the evening. A mass meeting in the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, concluded the presentation. It was estimated that a total of 3,800 people was reached during the series. Much interest has been quickened as a result of these meetings.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—A parish mission on the Forward Movement in Grace Church, Grand Rapids, Michigan, was conducted by the Rev. A. M. Sherman for five days early in November. A parish institute with three classes—on the Bible, Church History, and Missions (Latin America) was held in the afternoon. Popular preaching services, with Discipleship as the theme, were held in the evening.

As a result 198 persons signed a pledge card on which was printed a rule of life embodying worship, giving, praying and serving. These cards were given in at a corporate communion following the mission. At a parish supper held the following week the parish as a whole adopted two great objectives as necessary to its life—the steady and corporate worship of God and the enlistment of others as disciples. To make this more definite, a confirmation class of 100 is sought and every guild and every individual is urged to do their part in bringing others to church membership.

Mobile, Ala.—Four programs on the Forward Movement are included in the booklet, "Young People's Programs," published by the Young People's Service League of the Province of Sewanee. Copies may be obtained (35 cents each) from Marshall Seifert, 112 Houston Street, Mobile.

TO THE BISHOPS, DIOCESAN EXECUTIVE SECRETARIES AND DIOCESAN TREASURERS:

Our cash account for 1935 will be closed with the close of business January 20, 1936.

All receipts from Dioceses, Parishes, or Individuals (except those marked specifically for 1936) will up to January 13 be included in our 1935 cash accounts. After January 13 the only remittances included in 1935 accounts will be those received from the Diocesan offices.

Credit memoranda will be sent daily during December and up to January 20. Thus in the final payments the Diocese will be able to establish the correct division of funds for the year 1935.

Supplementary remittances on account of 1935 will be received at any subsequent time and credited by memoranda to the 1935 account, but such remittances must be included in our 1936 cash account.

The National Council,
Lewis B. Franklin, Treas.

ARCHBISHOP OF YORK GUEST AT LUNCHEON AT GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Archbishop Temple of York was the speaker December 16 at the General Theological Seminary at a luncheon in his honor given by five ecumenical organizations. The cooperating groups were the International Missionary Council, the Universal Christian Council for Life and Work, the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, the World Conference on Faith and Order, and the World Student Christian Federation.

The Rev. Dr. Eugene C. Carder, associate pastor of the Riverside Church, was toastmaster. The Rev. Dr. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, offered the invocation. The Rev. Dr. William Adams Brown, of the Union Theological Seminary, made the official response to Archbishop Temple, while the benediction was given by Archbishop Athenagoras of the Greek Orthodox Church.

More than 100 leading clergymen of several denominations attended the luncheon which was arranged by Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, executive secretary of the Universal Christian Council, and Rear Admiral Reginald R. Gelknap, U. S. N. (retired).

Before the luncheon the Archbishop addressed the seminary students at a service in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd.

VIRGINIA SEMINARY NEWS.

Bishop Rowe of Alaska addressed a large audience at the Seminary December 6. He was brought to the Hill as guest of the Missionary Society of which Ernest A. DeBordenave is president.

His account of his heroic exploits in spreading the Christian message in "Uncle Sam's Attic", as a contemporary writer has described Alaska, kindled considerable interest in the Church's mission there.

Prof. and Mrs. A. C. Zabriskie, who spent last summer visiting the missionary work of our Church in South America, especially in Brazil, and who have seen more of our activity there than any other white persons except Bishop Thomas himself, have been busy all autumn in filling speaking engagements about their trip.

James K. Friedrich, a senior in the seminary, has prepared a moving-picture film using pictures they took, with the results, the lectures on the Church's missionary work which have been given in churches from Richmond to New York City have proved a great success and a genuine stimulus to missionary interest. The proceeds of these lectures are being contributed to the seminary missionary fund.

THE "MESHA" STONE.

The "Mesha" or Moabite stone, discovered at Dhiban (the ancient Dibon), a few miles north of the Arnon River, Palestine, in 1868, is of special significance. "Apart from the light it sheds upon an obscure portion of Jewish history. It is of great value to the archaeologist as the oldest specimen of the alphabetic writing in the world, dating back to 890 B. C. (2,825 years). The Assyrian inscriptions are older than the Moabite stone, but they had not a language of letters, the arrow-headed characters being used to denote words; the hieroglyphics of Egypt are older but they are symbolic writing, not alphabetic; for instance, a lamp amongst the Egyptians signified life, a jackal, cunning, a wave of line running water, etc., so the finding of the 'Mesha' or Moabite stone has helped greatly to settle the long disputed question, as to the origin of letters and the art of writing; it also shows plainly that Semetic nations east of the Jordan were more civilized than generally is admitted, that they practiced writing nearly three thousand years ago, if not much earlier; that in writing, the same characters were used by the Semetic nations; that the Phoenician and Hebrew alphabets were closely allied, if not identical in their origin; also it illustrates the history of our own language, for the whole of the Greek alphabet is here found in its primitive state, showing that the Greeks must have received the entire alphabet from the East. And what is perhaps more singular, we find on this stone many of the letters of our own alphabet, showing that many of the characters in use today are very similar to those used in the days of Moses. The Moabite stone is now in the Louvre in Paris, and was faithfully translated by Claremont Ganneau. The writings on the stone (there are over 1,000 letters and 34 lines) appear to be an addition to the second Book of Kings, the first words being 'and Moab rebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab'; it gives the particulars of Judah and Edom, who go forth to repress the rebellion—who the king of Moab was, the cities he built, the gods he worshipped, how he took Nebo, and what he did with his prisoners.

"The language is very expressive, and from the facts set forth we learn that after Solomon's reign, Moab again became an independent nation. It was then known as the 'land of Moab' and 'Mesha' was King, and Dibon its capital; that they were oppressed for forty years by the house of Omri, father of Ahab, the founder of Samaria, Mesha goes to war with Israel, and this greeny black basalt monument was erected apparently to commemorate his deeds."

PENNSYLVANIA

Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, S. T. D., Bishop.

—o—

Bishop Hobson's Talks to Clergy Conference and Laymen Give Powerful Stimulus to Forword Movement in Diocese.

Evidence of the responsiveness of the Diocese of Pennsylvania to the challege of the Forward Movement was unmistakably demonstrated in Philadelphia in an All-Day Conference of the Clergy and in the evening by the attendance of upwards of 700 laymen at a dinner and conference for laymen. The Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson, Chairman of the General Convention Commission on the Forward Movement, conducted the clergy conference and was the chief speaker at the laymen's meeting.

The clergy conference, held in the Church of the Holy Trinity, was called by the Bishop and the Diocesan Commission, that the clergy might have the opportunity to meet Bishop Hobson and to learn from him of the progress of the Movement. In addition to the Pennsylvania clergy, many of the clergy of the Diocese of Delaware were present, in response to invitations extended them by Bishop Taitt. Beginning with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 10 A. M., the conference continued throughout the whole day, with a brief intermission for luncheon at which the conferees were the guests of Bishop Taitt.

The dinner and conference for laymen was under the auspices of the Church Club of the diocese, and was in the great ball room of the Penn Athletic Club. Virtually every parish and mission congregation in the diocese was represented.

Of special significance was the large attendance of youth of the Church. As several of the older members of the Church Club said, "This is probably the first time in many years so many young men have come to a meeting of this kind, and surely it must be evidence that our young people have caught the spirit of adventure in this undertaking and are watching to see if we too are enrolling in this Movement."

Bishop Hobson's conduct of the clergy conference and his address at the laymen's meeting were both characterized by a simplicity, sincerity, and directness of utterance that has unquestionably given a powerful stimulus to the Forward Movement in Pennsylvania.

At the laymen's meeting in the evening, Bishop Hobson made a strong impression on the laymen. Mr. E. Osborne Coates, President of the Church Club, introduced the speakers. In addition to Bishop Hobson, these were Bishop Taitt, and the Rev. Wallace E. Conkling, rector of St. Luke's Church, Germantown, and a member of the Commission.

Bishop Hobson dscribed the Forward Movement as "bringing the men and women of the Church to a new sense of God's power, and sending them forth, one with another, as followers of Him in this new advance of the Church's life."

Deprecating any view that it is a Movement belonging to any man or men he told of his answer to a question put to him by a friend in which the latter asked, "Bishop, what is this Movement of yours?"

"All I can reply to such a question," the Bishop said to the assembled laymen, "is my friend was talking blasphemy, because it is blasphemy to take this Forward Movement and ascribe its ownership to any man. It doesn't belong to men; it belongs to God Himself. It is God who is marching on eternally. It is His Forward Movement which has been going on through the ages step by step."

While it is true, the Bishop added, that by the unanimous vote of the General Convention a resolution was adopted calling the Church to go Forward, the thing did not begin there.

"It was simply that at that time," Bishop Hobson continued, "there were those in the Church who in their longing, and yearning, and struggling, wanted to see the Church go out with new power and they said: 'We are not going to be content sitting here doing nothing about it. We are not going to face conditions in the world today, with all the disheartening consequences of those conditions, and do nothing about it. We are not going to stand still, ourselves, and look at the Church we love suffering from grievous sickness and do nothing about it. We are going to believe that God has a purpose for His Church to go out and proclaim a Gospel with new power, and believing that, we are going to have belief in the Spirit of God to give us power to accomplish that purpose; that we will not be inadequate and beaten men, but men who go forth renewing that power and strength as we come in touch with Him day by day.' It was this that brought the Forward Movement into being.

"The question we all have to ask ourselves in this great adventure to follow Christ are: 'Am I going to be part of it? Am I going to share in it, or is this adventure going to leave me beside the road and go on without me? Is it going to prove that I am a quitter or a shirker, or that Christ is my Captain and that I am marching on with Him to victory.'

"I am convinced," Bishop Hobson declared, "that only as individual members of the Church, those who are daring to call themselves by the name of the Master, taking seriously this Call of the Master and applying it seriously to our lives, only thus can the Church go Forward."

Dedication Service.

On Tuesday afternoon, December 10, in the Church of the Epiphany, a beautiful window was dedicated as a memorial to Mr. William Channing Johnson, for many years a Vestryman of the parish, its treasurer, and during the last few years of his life, Junior Warden. It is safe to affirm that no one was more universally beloved than this man of God to whom everything connected with Epiphany Church was sacred. The Wardens and Vestry have therefore welcomed this memorial gift, placed in the church by his devoted wife. The service of dedication was held at 4:30 Tuesday afternoon, attended by many members of the parish and friends of Mr. Johnson.

Bishop Rowe Speaks to Crowded Churches.

The Rt. Rev. Peter T. Rowe, Bishop of Alaska, preached to a crowded church Sunday morning, December 8, at Emmanuel, Brook Hill, Richmond, and that night addressed the combined congregations of the city in St. Paul's Church, which in spite of inclement weather, was filled to capacity. The Bishop's simple yet eloquent plea thrilled his hearers; his picture of the necessity for the ministrations of the Church in his far-off field made one ashamed to think that there is danger of the work being seriously handicapped, or perhaps closed in some places, because of the lack of support from home. The Bishop remained in Richmond, at the home of the Misses Stewart for the remainder of the week.

Laymen's Association Meetings.

Three meetings of the Layman's Association of the Rappahannock Convocation have been held this fall, with very good attendance each time. The meetings were addressed by Bishop Tucker with the group in Fredericksburg, the Rev. Mr. George Ossman in Warsaw, and Mr. John Mordecai at Old Church.

Cathedral Choir at Evanston.

The Cathedral Choir, a group of eighty University of Nebraska students under the direction of John Rosborough, will appear in a sacred concert at Saint Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston, Sunday afternoon, December 22. The group is starting on an eastern tour and will make its first stop in Evanston. Mr. Rosborough was a student under the late Dean Peter Christian Lutkin, of Northwestern University, and a devoted Churchman.

Plans for Archbishop of York.

Plans for the entertainment in Chicago of the Archbishop of York have been completed under direction of Bishop Stewart. The Archbishop will arrive in the city Saturday, January 4. That night he will be the guest of honor at a reception and dinner given by the Church Club at the Hotel Sherman.

Sunday, January 5, he will preach at St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, Evanston, in the morning at eleven and will speak before the Chicago Sunday Evening Club at Orchestra Hall, in the evening. Monday, January 6, he will address Chicago clergy at luncheon at St. Luke's, and in the evening the Adult Education Society in Oak Park.

Tuesday, January 7, he will be at the Seabury-Western Seminary for luncheon and that evening he will start the series of Moody Lectures at the University of Chicago. Wednesday, January 8, he speaks to the English Speaking Union at luncheon; has supper with the Anderson Society and faculty at the University of Chicago in the evening after which he gives the second of the Moody Lectures. Thursday, January 9, he will appear before the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese at St. Luke's Pro-Cathedral, and after his concluding lecture at the University of Chicago, will leave for New York and his return trip to England.

St. Mary's Home Buys Racine College.

Old Racine College, one of the most historical spots of the Church in the whole Middle West, has been saved to the Church.

Announcement is made that Saint Mary's Home for Children, Chicago, has purchased the college property. For the present the property will be used during the summer as a summer home for the children. As soon as funds are available for necessary repairs and maintenance of Taylor Hall, a retreat and conference work will be started there. The title to be given to the work is the DeKoven Foundation for Church Work.

Later it is hoped to expand the work still farther.

This development in the life and work of the Community of Saint Mary in its work in the Middle West would seem to be particularly fitting. For it was Dr. DeKoven who largely was responsible for bringing the Sisters to the Middle West in 1878.

There has been a great deal of apprehension as to the future of the Racine College grounds in recent years. After the college itself was closed, the property was used for a military school, promoted largely by Chicago interests. This plan eventually was abandoned. Then the children of St. Mary's Home spent a couple of summers there. Previously they had gone to Doddridge Farm, near Libertyville, established for this specific purpose by Mr. Britton I. Budd, Chicago traction official, in mem-

Plans For Diocesan-Wide Mission Go Forward.

About seventy laymen from various parishes and missions throughout the diocese gathered December 19 at the parish house of the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, to arrange for the Diocesan-wide Mission set for February 2-16. They were addressed by Bishop Bennett and members of the committee in charge of the unique project. Bishops and presbyters distinguished for their gifts as missioners will come to Rhode Island at that time to cooperate with a group of diocesan clergy. In practically every parish and mission a teaching mission will be held. One of the features now being stressed is a children's mission to be held in the afternoons, wherever it can be adequately prepared for.

The Archbishop of York Fills Many Speaking Engagements.

The Most Rev. and Right Hon. William Temple, Archbishop of York, was in New York from Saturday, December 14-17. On Sunday morning he preached at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and Sunday afternoon at Trinity Church, where Sir Gerald Campbell, British Consul General in New York, read the lessons. Sunday evening the Archbishop spoke at a service in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine held in the interest of Christian unity under the auspices of the leading international agencies for the promotion of Christian reunion. Other speakers at the service were the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Dr. John R. Mott.

On Monday the Archbishop spoke at a luncheon at General Theological Seminary and in the afternoon he attended Columbia University, where he received an honorary degree. In the evening Archbishop Temple was the guest of honor at a dinner given by the Church Club of New York at the Waldorf-Astoria. Bishop Manning and Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler were among the speakers at the dinner.

Noon-Day Lectures for Business People at Old Trinity.

The Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, D. D., rector of Old Trinity Church, Broadway and Wall Street, has been giving a series of weekday noonday addresses during Advent on the general subject, "The Bible". The addresses are particularly for business people and are held from 12 to 12:30 P. M.

Memorial Services.

A memorial service for Dr. Clement Clarke Moore, author of "A Visit From St. Nicholas" was held Sunday afternoon at St. Peter's Church. Dr. Moore was one of the founders of the parish. The Rev. Richard A. D. Beaty is the present rector of this old New York parish. The memorial sermon for Dr. Moore was preached by the Very Rev. Milo H. Gates, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

On Sunday morning, December 15, the anniversary of the death of the late Rev. Dr. H. Percy Silver, a memorial service was held in the Church of the Incarnation, at which the Rev. Dr. Howard C. Robbins was the preacher. The Vestry of the Church of the Incarnation are planning as a permanent memorial to Dr. Silver to renovate the rectory and make such changes as will be necessary to convert it into a community centre and parish house.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Bishop

The Archbishop of York in Diocese.

This diocese was most happy in having a visit from the Most Rev. and Right Hon. William Temple, D. D., Litt. D., Archbishop of York, and Mrs. Temple.

After speaking from Washington, D. C., for the "Church of The Air" on Sunday morning, December 8, the Archbishop and Mrs. Temple took train for Danville, Virginia. There they were met by the Hon. Thomas G. Burch, who drove them to Martinsville, for a visit with relatives; Mrs. Temple being a niece of the late Rev. Alfred W. Anson, who was for twenty years rector of Christ Church, Martinsville, and whose widow and several daughters still reside there.

Monday morning an official committee, composed of Bishop Jett, the Rev. Charles F. Fishburne, Jr., present rector of Christ Church, and several others of the clergy in this section of the diocese, called on the Archbishop and welcomed him to Southwestern Virginia. At ten o'clock there was an interesting ceremony on the lawn of Christ Church when, in the presence of a large assemblage, Bishop Jett introduced the Archbishop in a brief address, to which His Grace made felicitous response. The Archbishop then assisted in planting and dedicating a tree, which will stand as a memorial of his visit. After this, accompanied by Bishop Jett and Mr. Burch, he returned to Danville, where he took the train to Washington for an engagement at the College of Preachers.

Mrs. Temple remained a few days longer at Martinsville and on Tuesday drove to Roanoke for a visit with other near relatives. While there she was a guest at the parish luncheon of St. John's Church. On this occasion she was gracefully introduced by Mrs. Robert C. Jett and spoke briefly but charmingly of her pleasure in being in America and of this opportunity of observing in action an especially live and active parish branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. The luncheon was held, as usual, in conjunction with the monthly meeting of the Auxiliary of St. John's Church.

Gift of Carillon a Thank Offering to Christ Church Chapel.

Marking the fifth anniversary of the dedication of Christ Church Chapel, Grosse Pointe Farms, Detroit, a carillon of twenty-three bells was dedicated on Sunday, December 15. The bells range in size from fifty to 1,300 pounds and represent the thank offering of John W. Anderson, a member of the church. The bells were cast by Gillett & Johnston at Croydon, England, and were rung for the first time on the evening of December 14, exactly five years from the time of dedication of the chapel, by Dr. Alle D. Zuidema of the Detroit Institute of Musical Art. A reception and musical program concluded the evening. The new carillon is one of three in metropolitan Detroit. The anniversary and dedication was held Sunday morning, with the Rev. Francis B. Creamer, rector, as preacher. DEATHS

MALBON GORE RICHARDSON.

Resolutions.

Whereas, on the sixth day of November, 1935, it did please Almighty God to visit death upon MALBON GORE RICHARDSON; and whereas for twenty odd years the said deceased had resided in Meade Parish in the Commonwealth of Virginia and had ever during this time been a stanch and loyal supporter of Trinity Church, Upperville, serving for many years upon the vestry and for several years as Senior Warden and had also been a member of the said church's choir; and whereas as a resident of the Upperville neighborhood he had established a reputation for uprightness of character and kindness of heart; and whereas his presence on earth is sorely missed by those who knew of his many good works;

Now, therefore be it resolved, that the vestrymen of Trinity Church, Meade Parish, Upperville, Virginia, do hereby express their sorrow at the loss of Malbon Gore Richardson and do hereby instruct their Registrar to enter this resolution of grief in the vestry minutes book and do further instruct him to send a copy of this resolution to the Southern Churchman for publication. in the cornerstone, which was then sealed. There was also an address by the Rev. Wm. D. Maxon, D. D., rector emeritus of Christ Church, Detroit, under whose leadership the chapel was conceived and built. A young people's service was then held, at which the history of Grosse Pointe was presented in tableaux.

Dr. Reinheimer Takes Post.

The Rev. Bartel H. Reinheimer, D. D., bishop coadjutor-elect of the diocese, has formally accepted that office, following Communion in St. Andrew's Church, Rochester.

He was chosen at a convention of clergy and lay delegates of this diocese, November 19, in St. Luke's Church, when Dr. Reinheimer was executive secretary of the Field Department of the National Council.

Dr. Reinheimer was a guest at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Frederick Crosby Lee, rector of the St. Andrew's Church.

"It looks to me like a splendid opportunity to come into this diocese and have the privilege of establishing standards that would be far more difficult to introduce in an old diocese," he said. "There ought to be a fine chance to work out experiments, probably, to establish pioneer work."

Asked what he regarded the greatest progress the Episcopal Church had made in recent years in its contribution to society, Dr. Reinheimer said he thought the laymen's part in aiding this country through the recent depression.

"It has been most gratifying in these difficult years, the prominent part our leaders have taken," he answered. "The Church has in some way developed a type of laymen most helpful in benevolent work."

Awaits Confirmation.

According to the government of the Church, the choice of Dr. Reinheimer must be confirmed by a majority of the seventy-four dioceses in the country, a majority of the bishops and by the Presiding Bishop. This will occupy, probably two or three months. His consecration cannot take place until after this has been accomplished.

Dr. Reinheimer, whose home is in Branxville, has three sons. Frederick, the oldest, is a freshman at the University of Michigan; John is a freshman at Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.; and Philip is a second former at Lennox School, Lennox, Mass.

Large Number of Armenians Attend Commemorative Services.

On the Second Sunday in Advent, December 8, a special service was held in St. Pauls Church, Grand Rapids, the Rev. C. M. Farney, rector, in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the printed English Bible and the fifteen hundredth anniversary of the translation of the Holy Scriptures into the Armenian language.

The sermon was preached by Bishop McCormick, and a large number of Armenians were in the congregation and extended their appreciation to the Bishop for arranging the service. At the conclusion of the service copies of old Armenian Bibles and Service books were placed on inspection. Several Armenian families are members of St. Paul's congregation.

Personal Notes

The Rev. Frederick W. Neve, D. D., Archdeacon of the Blue Ridge, of Ivy Depot, Va., and author of The Thousandfold Page, celebrated his eightieth birthday on Sunday, December 20. On Monday, he went up "the Preventorium," high up in the mountains of the Archdeaconry, where he had another celebration, jointly with Miss Park, the superintendent, whose birthday was on that day. The little patients in the Preventorium took part, and many of the mission workers came to offer their congratulations.

Illness in the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia.

The Rev. Thomas D. Lewis, D. D., has been quite ill and for some time past has been a patient at the University of Virginia Hospital under the care of specialists there. Dr. Lewis is rector of the churches at Amherst and Clifford, in Amherst County, an Examining Chaplain and President of the Standing Committee of the Diocese. His many freinds will be glad to learn that he expects to be able to return to his home at Amherst very soon, though for a while longer he will not be able to resume active work in his parish. For the present, assistance in the care of these churches is being rendered by the Rev. Robert U. Brooking, retired clergyman of the Diocese of Virginia, who now has his home in Amherst.

Captain George F. Wiese, Missionary at Grace House-on-the-Mountain in Wise County, underwent an emergency operation for appendicitis on Tuesday, December 10, in the hospital at Coeburn, Va. According to latest reports his general condition is quite satisfactory and he is making a good recovery.

Calls Accepted.

The Rev. Charles Schilling has accepted the call to become rector of the Church of Our Saviour, and Canon at the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip, Atlanta.

In accepting this call he leaves his post as minister-in-charge of the Church of the Ascension, Cartersville, St. Mark's Church, Dalton, and St. James, Cedartown.

Attending the Universities of Virginia and Georgia, he was graduated from the latter with a B. A. degree in 1931. He received his B. D. degree from Sewanee in 1934, after winning the Shettle prize for the best thesis in his department. He attended the summer school of Social Service in Cincinnati, and graduated in 1934.

The Rev. Mr. Schilling was ordained as deacon in 1934, by Bishop Mikell in the Pro-Cathedral of St. Philip. He was ordered to the priesthood December 15 at St. James' Church, Marietta, by Bishop Mikell. The Rev. Randolph Claiborne of St. James, Macon, life-long friend of Mr. Schilling, will preach the ordination sermon.

Mr. Schilling will assume his new duties January 1.

The Rev. Donald W. Crawford, formerly of St. Paul's Church, Chicago, became rector of Trinity Church, Detroit, on December 15, succeeding the Rev. Benedict Williams, who resigned to become assistant to Dean Chester B. Emerson of Cleveland. Mr. Crawford went to St. Paul's, Chicago, about four years ago, as assistant to the late Dr. George H. Thomas. He is a native of St. John, New Brunswick, Canada, received his bachelor's degree from the University of New Brunswick, and took his theological studies at Wycliffe College, Toronto. He is also a graduate of the McGill University Conservatory of Music and Organ, in Montreal.

The Rev. Paul Due, formerly rector of Our Saviour, Du Bois, Pa.; to become rector of Calvary Church, Montgomery and Redeemer, Ansted, W. Va., December 22. His new address will be Montgomery, W. Va.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Sydney Ralph Peters, rector of St. John's Chapel, Ashton, R. I., now a deacon, will be ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Perry on December 21, at the Cathedral of St. John, Providence. He will be presented by Canon Stanley C. Hughes, rector of Trinity Church, Newport. The Rev. Harold R. Carter, rector of St. Peter's Church, Manton, will preach the sermon. The Rev. James M. Duncan, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Auburn, will assist.

The Rev. Mr. Peter's was born March 2, 1906, in Birmingham, England. In 1934 he graduated from Kings College, London University. As a youth he joined the English Church Army, a large organization of lay evangelists, divided into sixty departments. His work there was so notable that he was drafted and sent to the United States in response to an appeal for aid in establishing the American Church Army, the ward of the English organization, under the tutelage of Captain B. Frank Mountford.

The young captain served in every state in New England and as far south as South Carolina. At one time he was in charge of a van operating in three archdeaconries in the Diocese of Albany, New York. He served five years in the English Army and two in the American. On Epiphany, 1927, at the opening of the Bishops' Crusade, before he was twenty-one years old, he preached in the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, R. I., to a congregation which packed the ancient church to the doors.

Bishop Taitt Ordains Three.

The ordination of three men to the priesthood took place in Calvary Church, Germantown, Penn., Sunday morning, December 15, the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt officiating.

Those advanced to the priesthood and their presenters were the Rev. William James Bennett, Jr., now curate of Christ Church, Binghampton, New York, the Rev. Dr. Franklin Joiner, rector of St. Clement's, Philadelphia, presetner; the Rev. J. Perry Cox, curate of St. John's, Lansdowne, the Rev. Granville Taylor, vicar of The Mediator, West Philadelphia, presenter, and the Rev. Alfred Palmore Harrison, curate at Calvary Church, Germantown, the Rev. Dr. Lewis G. Morris, rector of Calvary Church, presenter. Bishop Taitt preached the ordination sermon, and also administered confirmation to a class presented by the rector, the Rev. Lewis G. Morris. Mr. Bennett entered the ministry from St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia; Mr. Cox began his preparation for Holy Orders at The Mediator in West Philadelphia, and Mr. Harrison entered the ministry from the Church of the Redemption in West Philadelphia.

George Leonard Browne.

The Rev. George Leonard Browne, retired clergyman, whose name was placed on the non-parochial list in 1930, died Thursday, December 5, at the Rhode Island Hospital in Providence, following an operation. He was in his sixty-second year. He leaves no near relatives.

The grandson of Dr. Solomon Browne, a noted professor of botany at Brown University, Mr. Browne graduated from that university in 1898. In 1900 he studied at Harvard Divinity School. The following year he attended Union Theological Seminary. Clark University in Worcester, Mass., gave him a Master of Arts degree in 1906, while he was both instructing in English at the university and doing newspaper work.

In 1913 he became news manager for the Newark (N. J.) Evening News, but the following year he decided to enter the ministry and was ordained minister in the Congregational Church. He served two parishes in that denomination, one at Hampton, Conn., and the other at Rye, N. H. In 1918 he was ordained deacon by Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, and the following year raised to the priesthood by Bishop Babcock. His Episcopal parishes were: Trinity Church, Stoughton, which he served as associate rector; Grace Church, New Bedford, as assistant; St. Paul's Church, Plainfield, Conn.

The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon, December 8, in the Church of the Redeemer, the rector, the Rev. Donald J. Campbell, officiating.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

"Do we stumble at so great sublimity, doubting it just because it is so wondrously satisfying to our hearts? How blind! We were made to believe in the Incarnation!"

As the aviator may mount above the storm, so the soul may rise on the wings of faith above the circumstances of sorrow and misfortune to an abiding peace.

—Christian Observer

Christ is born; Behold the tides of grace;
From death to life He lifts the ruined race,
From hell to heaven; man's place at last the Throne—
So high the Saviour lifts.

It isn't far to Bethlehem town!
It's anywhere that Christ comes down
And finds in people's friendly face
A welcome and abiding place.
The road to Bethlehem runs right through
The homes of folks like me and you.

Madeline S. Miller.

Argument may lead us astray, the goodness of God is something to which the experience of life bears unshaken witness, something to which we can safely trust ourselves even in the hour of death.

—Gilbert White.

Christ's Cross constitutes the supreme moral power ever exhibited to humanity. With its message it has reached and now reaches the most depraved and corrupt, the most debased and degraded. It brings them new hope, and it transforms their lives.

The glory that is going to be revealed is hidden from us. It is going to be one of God's wondrous surprises for us. That is one reason why it is concealed from our eyes. There is another, however. We simply could not understand. It passes our capacity here to comprehend it. When they crossed the river Bunyan's pilgrims talked with the shining ones about the glory of the place, "who told them that the beauty and glory of it was inexpressible."

We are in league with the Controller of these forces, of all force. Our arm can move the arm that moves the worlds. How pitiful are our fears, having vital touch with this vast power! Every worry is a proof of our disbelief. Every anxiety denies the reality of our Christianity.

God liveth! "The firm foundation standeth sure." This is the only rock to stand upon when the clouds have gathered, and the waters are out, and the great deeps are broken up. God's sceptre does not fall from His grasp, nor is snatched by alien hands. The throne abideth. Joy will rise from the apparent chaos as springs are unsealed by the earthquake. He will bring fortune out of misfortune; the darkness shall be the hiding-place of His grace.

—J. H. Jowett.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Ministers and Mysteries.

Mr. Editor:

Sunday, December 15th, is known in the Church as "Minister's Sunday". On this day the great teaching is stressed that members of the Christian ministry are to be accounted of, "as of the ministers of Christ and stewards of the mysteries of God".

In modern times the ministry is overflowing with various mysteries. New religious groups are coming forward with doctrines that are not ancient in the Church, and along with their doctrines come a host of myteries. Unfortunately, the world is not able to account for these so-called mysteries, "as of mysteries of God". The Reformation was warranted in the Mediaeval Church, due to excess of unholy mysteries. The Church failed in Russia because of its many mysteries without fruits of the Spirit of Christ. Whatever mysteries ministers are stewards of, it is their unescapable duty to prove to the world that the same mysteries are fundamental and vital for man and the social order now and forever.

It is readily admitted by those of sufficient experience that men are few in any race who have the deep moral and spiritual nature which Archdeacon Russell possessed. Therefore, if we hope for an Archdeacon Russell in every generation, we hope in vain. It is for our benefit to follow the good example of such men in the ministry.

The above mentioned character was not a msytery man, but was a practical leader in religion and education. He was religious, yet did not seem to be religious. What we seem to have in religion, as a rule, is always taken away from us and given to the ones who have. "Sham and make-believe" have no place in the mysteries of God. Thus there is a disadvantage in seeming to be religious. If Dr. Russell had gone to Lawrenceville, Va., fifty years ago, swallowed up in mysteries and ritural, he would not have accomplished the constructive work in the field of religion and education in Southern Virginia, which now stands as a monument and a benediction to his stewardship in the ministry.

There is one thing we must keep in mind concerning ministers and mysteries: A man cannot reflect in his character that which is not in his soul; and when he exercises himself in what he is not fitted to do, he makes a botch of a profession. That which is beyond human intelligence effects the world only in the spiritual and moral realm according to the fruit men bear of the same unknown reality.

Lloyd M. Alexander.

What Shall We Do With Our Bishops and Clergy?

Mr. Editor:

I have just re-read your editorial on "The Tenure of Bishops". You surely did set forth the difficulties that confront the Church, but I looked in vain for a single remedy proposed; in fact, you state at the end of the article that you have no solution. Is not this like a doctor going into a hospital where many are sick and suffering and giving the whole of them a lecture, setting forth clearly their ills, but saying at the close: "Well, you present many real difficulties, but I have no solution or remedy for them?" In my opinion the remedy is very simple. First rid the Church of the false idea that Bishops, and even clergy, must be supported liberally in order for them to do their work properly. This is a dreadful error. History shows clearly that when the clergy had least they did some of the most remarkable things. Endowments and pensions have not added to the power of the Church one bit. From New Testament times right down through history we can see that this is true. When we can see that the welfare of the Church is far more important than any individual in the Church, I think progress will be made. How can the Church look the Lord in the face and say: "Lord, we surely do need more Bishops very much, but you know, dear Lord, they are very expensive and must be maintained, no matter what becomes of the diocese or the parish, and you also know that many of them do not fit in where they have been placed, any more than a round peg slips easily into a square hole." Many resort to a "Quiet Day", when the fact is they have had that for the last fifty years. What they really need is an earthquake. What folly! Stop running the Church on high pressure financial lines. Come back to the New Testament method, sending men wherever they are needed and tell them they will have plenty of hardships, but also much joy and peace in His service. Call for men and women to throw themselves at His feet in a complete surrender, and see what will happen. Like Gideon, when confronted with a much graver problem, tell all the fearful to go back home, and I am sure it would be good ridrance of worthless material. Any one who will throw up his work because his salary is not paid or very small, is not fit to be in the army of the Lord. Such men have never been soundly converted. Imagine St. Paul or St. Francis or any one truly called of the Spirit to preach the Gospel, threatening to quit because of the salary received. The sooner such men go the better. Bishops are only servants of the Church and should be easily removed or replaced when they are not useful. We allow a parish or diocese to suffer for years because the head of it does not know how to run it. In business and the army such a thing would not be tolerated for a moment, and should not be in the Church. The "do nothing policy" must be abandoned. The Methodist and Roman Catholics move them with great rapidity, and I would like to see the same thing done in this Church of ours. It is almost like the law today that allows a rector to hold on to a parish, no matter how unfit, till he sees fit to resign or leave. This ought not to be! The Church has been so busy raising money to pay interest, mortgages, &c., she has well-nigh lost the art of raising the dead—in the pews! Oh, for a fresh baptism of power upon the whole Church! These are not pleasant statements, but they are true. Why not say them?

The Gospel of the Beauty of Earth.

The power of that pulsing life, which glows upon us from the blazing, noon-day summer sun and dwells in the comet, the heart of a bird, and the flying dust of pollen—the power of this life, if men will open their hearts to it, will heal them, will create them anew, physically and spiritually.

Here is the gospel of earth, the good tidings of nature, the message of the wonders of beauty that lie about us all the time. Here is the gospel of the beauty of the earth, "ringing with hope, like May mornings with bird-song, fresh and healthy as fields of young grain."

"The joy of a spring day revives a man's spirit, reacting healthily on bone and blood, just as the wholesome juices of plants cleanse the body, reacting on the mind," and just as the mild softness of Indian summer, autumn days bathe the spirit in a strengthening warm light.

On days, such as triumphant spring mornings or mellow, Indian summer, autumn days, we experience the sudden sense—keen and somewhat startling—of oneness with all beauty, seen and unseen. We feel in complete communion with universal life. The winds are our companions and the stars our fellow-travelers. Then only do we have our full share in the passion of life that fills all nature. Then only do we possess full vitality. Then we are caught into the rich, deep primal beauty of the earth, and life, cool and fresh, seems to flow in upon us.

We need no great gifts to draw deep breaths of inspiration from the beauty of the earth and to reap for ourselves the vitality that will come to us from letting the wondrous vitality of the beauty of earth seep into our souls.

The most ignorant and humble of us can derive a wealth of strength and life and vision from the plain soil we daily walk upon, for the way is through love of beauty and of reality and through absorbed preoccupation with those tokens of divinity that are like faint, miraculous foot-prints across the world. In the freemasonry of earth the only indispensable prerequisites are a humble mind and a receptive heart. "We must go softly if we desire the butterfly's confidence; we must walk humbly if we dare to ask for an interpretation of this dream of God."

And no accident of environment or circumstance need cut us off from the secrets of Nature. We can trace her spirit and taste her message of vitalizing beauty in the flowers of an apartment-house window-box, the eyes of a pleading dog, the sounds of chirping city-street sparrows.

It doesn't matter how shut-in we are. It is depth that brings understanding and life. "Dawn, seen through a sick woman's window, however narrow, pulses with the same fresh wonder as it does over the whole width of the sea. One violet is as sweet as an acre of them. And it often happens—as if by a kindly law of compensation—that those who have only one violet find the way through its narrow, purple gate in the land of God, while many who walk over dewy carpets of them do not so much as know that there is a land or way."

In the throng of vivid colors and mysterious sounds, of mountains and valleys, of birds and trees, we have a whole empire of wonder and of secrets into which we can step at will, with whom we have a bond because we are but another expression of the life that created them. Here we find "beauty that takes away the breath, romances that tingles to the finger-tips."

It is this sense of mystery and of sheer wonder—unfading, because the veil is never lifted—that gives glory to the countryside, tenderness to atmosphere. It is this that sends one man to the wilds, another to dig a garden; it is this that sings in a musician's brain, that rings in the poet's heart; it is this that inspires the pagan to build an altar and the child to make a cowslip-ball.

Beauty and Joy and Laughter are necessities of our being, and nature brims with them. These three—Beauty and Joy and Laughter—are the broadest riverways down which may flow "the essential life which itself is health and youth—beyond thought, beyond time, a sea that fills eternity—yet nearer than the air we breathe, imminent in the humblest creature, making material things transparent as a beech-leaf in the sun."

Let us concern ourselves with muted skies, and minute miracles, and songs of the night, and let us bend our knees before the wonders and mysterious secrets of beauty that nature is filled with. For Nature, with its beauties and silent wonders and soft voices, is the gateway through which we can, when we will, pass into the bosom and reach into the mind of God.

Frederick Ward Kates.

The Church

By JAMES E. FREEMAN,
Bishop of Washington.

WE ARE passing through a process in which we are re-appraising and re-evaluating those institutions that have to do with the most vital concerns of our life and well being. Statesmen and economists are endeavoring to discover new ways by which there may be a better distribution of wealth, and a finer economy and a more consistent practice in the operation of our many industries. Schools and academies are giving serious thought to systems of education with special reference to the adaptability of subjects prescribed to the needs of our common everyday life. Many institutions are being planned to lift the standards of the people to higher levels, and better housing for the masses occupies a conspicuous place in our emergency program.

What place is the Church to occupy, or indeed what place does it occupy in this age of new ideas and ideals? Is it an essential and indispensable factor in stabilizing the things of the state and in securing to us those values that we covet most? There are, obviously, large numbers of our people who indifferently regard the Church and ignore its plea for recognition. There are others who think of it as having value for the youth in particular and as furnishing diversion for a brief space once a week. For ministering to the aesthetic tastes of those who are spiritually minded, in every town, hamlet and city throughout our country, buildings of various names and representing diverse forms of worship stand upon the public highways as witnesses to religious faith and practice. Millions of dollars are expended annually for the promotion of those large concerns for which the Churches stand, and, despite the long-continued depression, new buildings are constantly being erected, and notwithstanding the moral sag we have witnessed in our generation, millions of adherents still claim these houses of worship as their own.

Every now and again an unusual and extraordinary condition arises that places a fresh value upon that for which these institutions stand. Those high in public office now and again accord to the Church a recognized place of power and influence. A natural query arises at this time, "What is the place that the Church occupies as an essential factor in the economy of our life?" Can it continue to exercise a strong moral and spiritual influence, for which it is obviously designed, unless it receives a more generous and widespread recognition? Even those who do not participate in its services express belief in its value and acknowledge its place in the scheme of our so-called Christian civilization. This scant praise is a poor contribution to its worth and value. Something more is needed than an occasional dole or a quasi-recognition of its place in our social order. The practice of Sunday worship does not and should not rest upon the genius of pulpit eloquence nor the splendor of music and ceremonial. It does rest upon the desire of the individual to experience that which corporate worship affords.

Too much emphasis is placed upon that which Church and pulpit purvey; too little upon that which the individual in the pew contributes. The very act of joining with one's fellows in worship, in song and praise is in itself an exhilarant and a tonic. Too frequently the average man or woman thinks of the Church as an institution in which clergy and choirs are the chief agents. Clergy and choirs are the servants of the people. They do not make worship,—they stimulate it. We recognize the just place which popular and effective preaching occupies. We also recognize the indispensableness and value of that which dignified ceremonial contributes, but beyond all else we recognize that which the pew and the individual in the pew contribute to the elevation of worship to its high place of refreshment and stimulation. It was said of Jesus that, He went on the Sabbath day to the synagogue "as His custom was." He went to join with His friends and neighbors in an act of worship, and by His own presence to contribute to those ends for which the syngaogue stood. No one is so poor or inconspicuous but that he may by his presence and devout practice at Church worship contribute to the well-being of the community in which he lives. In no place may we express more fully or completely the commonness of our human interests than in the Church.

THE WAY TO PEACE.

By W. J. Moore.

Love thy neighbor as thyself,
Our blessed Lord hath said,
For 'tis the way to foster peace,
No future wars to dread.

Who is thy neighbor? often asked
By many who should know;
Why, everyone whom God hath made
To fraternize below.

He may be far, he may be near,
But neighbor just the same;
The Prince of Peace admonished this,
O bless His holy name.

If Christ's injunction we'll but heed,
And to His will now bend,
All wars will cease and we'll have peace,
Good will on earth toward men.

Thou shalt not kill, was thundered forth
From Sinai's lofty peak,
This high command must be obeyed,
If we His love would seek.

War is hell, it hath been said—
How true is this acclaim—
Then from this day, in every way,
True peace should be our aim.

Our chiefest thoughts should be of peace,
Not bloody conflicts, war,
And in this way we'll purge our minds
Of that we most abhor.

If we these firm resolves will make—
Poor pilgrims on our way—
We'll love our neighbors as ourselves,
And Peace will crown the day.

THE THOUSANDFOLD PAGE

ARCHDEACON FREDERICK W. NEVE, D. D.

An Outlook on a New Year

"There is no new thing under the sun." Eccles. 1:9. These are the words of the wise man of old, and there is a good deal of truth in them. But there may be a renewal of what has gone before, and which has been temporarily displaced, by some other phase of human thought. In the Twentieth Century, so far, the emphasis has been placed upon the sovereignty of man rather than upon the sovereignty of God. Man's growing sovereignty over Nature has so completely absorbed our attention and so strongly appealed to our imagination, that there seems to be scarcely any limit to the capacity of this human nature of ours to attain almost any thing upon which man sets his mind.

Man Less Conscious of His Need of God.

And so there are many who have come to lose sight of God as being a necessary part of their lives. The Church, therefore, is faced with the difficult task of restoring to men's minds the thought of God as holding the supreme place, not only in the outside world of human affairs, but in our individual lives as well. For some time past the policy favored by many has been to humanize religion as much as possible in the hope and expectation that it would make it easier to believe, and therefore easier of acceptance, by men in general. The supernatural claims of Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, together with His mighty works, which were used by Him to reveal to the world the Divine Compassion, have been, to a large extent, scaled down to make way for a purely human, though inspired, Prophet and Teacher of Divine Truth.

The Son of Man But Also the Son of God.

The title Son of Man, which Christ used of Himself, has been preferred to that of Son of God. It must be remembered, however, that Christ came not only to reveal a higher type of manhood than human nature had hitherto been considered capable of, but also to reveal the nature and character of God, which was only possible because He was the Son of God as well as the Son of Man. This is clear when we remember His rebuke to Philip, when he asked Him:—"Lord, show us the Father." Our Lord's answer was clear and unmistakable:—"Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? He that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself; for the Father that dwelleth in me, He doeth the works." St. John 14:8-10. Christ came into the world to make God known and to manifest His glory by His words and acts, but chiefly by the offering of Himself upon the Cross for the redemption of mankind.

The Witness of the Early Church.

That the Early Church recognized in His Person and work a revelation of the Nature and character of God, may be seen from many passages in the New Testament. For instance, in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews, Christ is described as being:—"The brightness of His Glory and the express image of His Person." And again we have the emphatic testimony of St. John, the beloved disciple, in his first Epistle:—"That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the Word of Life; (For the life was manifested and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that Eternal Life, which was with the Father, and was manifested in us.") 1 St. John 1:1-2.

The Witness of Modern Astronomy.

Modern Astronomy, by the vast extension of our knowledge of God's universe, which will be greatly increased when the new 200-inch telescope is in use, has given us a new revelation of the majesty and power of God. But such revelation, wonderful and awe-inspiring as it is, would be of no comfort or encouragement to us in time of need, nor would it inspire us with faith and confidence in Him if it were not for the revelation of the Love of God, given to us by His Son Jesus Christ our Lord. This new knowledge of the power and wisdom of God gives a new meaning to the words of the Psalmist:—"The heavens declare the Glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork." We see vastly more than the Psalmist did of the power and greatness of God manifested in the universe, but if that were all, we should feel stunned and oppressed by our own insignificance in comparison.

God's Power and Willingness to Help Us.

The Son of God came to let us know that God is Love, and that He not only has infinite Power at His disposal to help us as our Strength and our Salvation, but also has the willingness to use that power at all times and in all circumstances, on our behalf. For what could be stronger and clearer than the words of St. Paul:—"If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" Rom. 8:31-32. We cannot do better than to begin the New Year with the faith and assurance manifested by the same Apostle, when he wrote:—"I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. 8:38-39.

The Wonderful Year.

O wonderful! O wonderful!
The chance God gives to me,
To make each swiftly passing day
Speak of eternity;
To make each shining hour of gold
Fragrant with blessings manifold.

O wonderful! O wonderful!
To fathom depths of love,
And bring back pearls of countless price,
Such as in heaven above
God sets for her eternal gates,
Where many an angel stands and waits.

O wonderful! O wonderful!
To share the power divine,
And use it for the sons of men
In glowing deeds that shine
Like stars that glorify the night,
As messengers from realms of light.

Preaching and the Forward Movement

By RAYMOND E. MacBLAIN,

Rector of Saint George's Church, Clarksdale, Miss.

FOR THE PURPOSE of our discussion may we not define the Forward Movement as the revitalizing and revivifying in the lives of people, the saving grace of God. It is making real to people, so that they may put into active practice, what our Lord meant when He said—"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness." And after all, is this not one of the primary functions of the Church? Any Church that fulfills this function will have all its problems and worries solved for it, and will find that "the other things" will be added. But we are primarily concerned with the place the Prophetic Office, or preaching plays in this revitalizing process.

Without Attempting to preach a sermon, I do want to begin with a text from the Second Chapter of the Book of Acts—"But Peter, standing up with the eleven, lifted up his voice." You are all, of course, familiar with the passage from which this passage comes. "But when the Day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly," not in response to the towering beauty of some Cathedral, not in response to some ornate ritual, or of some stately melody rendered majestically by some beautiful choir, but in response to continued prayer and supplication, there appeared on each of them fire-tongues, the organ of instruction and persuasion—"and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." And Peter stood up in their midst, not to conduct some ritualistic service, not to make an appeal for funds with which to carry on the work, but to preach. And as a result of his preaching three thousand souls were added to the church the same day.

Ian MacLaren has said that "the sermon is the most critical and the most influential event in the religious week."

With this thought in mind, let us discover "how" and the "why", endeavoring to find the place that preaching plays in the Forward Movement.

AGAIN referring to Peter's sermon which played so large a part in the first great Forward Movement of the Church we find that there are three factors which enter into every sermon. Of course I realize that there is the preparation, the material, the style, etc., but we are here concerned with living factors. There is, first of all, the congregation, the people to whom the sermon is addressed. I am more and more convinced that the members of our church are the most patient people in the world, when we consider some of the sermons that are addressed to them on Sunday after Sunday. A sermon can do very little good, unless the people to whom it is addressed and their needs are visualized at the time of preparation. Also, the people to whom Peter spoke were prepared to receive the words that he delivered to them. They had been in the process of preparation and their minds were attuned to his message. We all stress a service of preparation for the Holy Communion, and rightly so, but it is almost as important that the people prepare themselves to receive the sermon. Beginning with the organ prelude, which really opens the service, all outside cares and worries should be cast aside and forgotten and the mind and spirit brought into a spirit of reverence, so that the soul may be receptive of the good that can come from a service of the church, of which the sermon is an important part.

The function of the sermon, as someone has said, is the creation, nurture, and direction of the Christian impulse in the people who are listening to the preacher. That is one definition that I learned in my seminary days that I have never forgotten and have never failed to hold before me. It should make men feel so strongly that they will form a resolution. And this resolution should be so deep that it will result in corresponding action. This is what happened at the time of Peter's sermon. The people who were listening to him had the truth of Christ so deeply imprinted in their souls that they felt it and resolved to carry it out in their lives. As a result three thousand of them acted; they were added to the church.

THE OTHER TWO living factors I have grouped together, for unless they are inseparable, the sermon is a weak effort at the best. There is the man himself and there is the Holy Spirit. Why was Peter's sermon so effective? Because he was filled with the Holy Ghost. It was the spirit of God speaking through him, using him as its organ of expression. The man standing before the people should be endeavoring each time to give to them the highest and the best that is in him. The preacher should never be content unless the best in his own life has uttered itself in such a way as to find and aid the best in the lives of those to whom he is preaching. But he cannot do this unless the Holy Spirit moves in and through him out to the people he is contacting. Therefore, we must follow the example of Peter in the preparation of his sermon. He lived with Christ and continued constant in prayer and supplication.

There are three aspects or functions in the ministry of every man. There is, first of all, the Priestly office and that is highly important. This is the man representing his people before God. There is the Prophetic office in which the man probably contacts more people than at any other time (provided the people come to church). This is the man presenting God to the people. And there is last, but not least, the pastoral office—the man taking God to his people. You may be a good Priest, but you cannot be a good Prophet, if you neglect the Pastoral office. Through it, you come to know your people, become cognizant of their problems and worries and thus are able to preach a Gospel that will lift them out of the rut. Men and women cannot go forward who are stuck in the mire of unbelief, whatever its cause, and by learning the cause, your sermon can be constructed accordingly and give them the aid needed for progress. Further, the people come to know and love the man and are more willing and able to listen to what he may have to say.

This is all made extremely clear in the preaching of our Lord. "Seeing the multitude"—His message in the Sermon on the Mount, was called forth by the fact that he had been with the people and knew the appeal of life. He felt the challenge of their need and met it with the best that He could bring. And that is preaching!

MacLaren was right when he said that the sermon is the most influential event in the religious week, for it should be the summing up into words of encouragement and grace the spiritual needs of the people, thus enabling them to Go Forward into the establishment of Christ's Kingdom among men.

Men in Motion

By WILLIAM R. GIGNILLIAT,
Layman, Birmingham, Alabama.

THINGS IN MOTION attract attention—the pounding of ocean waves—the flow of a river—the flight of birds—the racing of horses—all hold your interest and attention. Why? Because of movement—something is going somewhere—somebody is doing something.

An interesting movement is under way in the Episcopal Church in Alabama, and the force behind the movement is the Laymen's League, recently organized in the diocese. The League is intended to bring the loosely formed men's clubs and similar bodies now existing in the Church into a simple, inexpensive organization, national in scope, with national and diocesan officers and a branch in each parish and mission.

The purpose of the national and diocesan organizations is to supply thoughtful leadership and helpful suggestion on a broad scale. The purpose of the parish and mission branches is to get each individual layman to do some active work for the Church, thereby learning more about the Church and as a result becoming a better churchman, with benefit to himself and the Church, both locally and nationally.

Started about a year ago, the League now has a functioning diocesan organization and sixteen parish and mission branches in Alabama. The diocesan organization consists of a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary-Treasurer and an Executive Committee of nine.

For the year 1934-35, the following diocesan program, brief but comprehensive, was proposed as a basic guide for the parish and mission branches:

Organization.

Extend the organization of the League in the Diocese of Alabama to all parishes and missions through the help of the parish branches already organized.

Perfect the organization of existing parish or mission branches of the League by the adoption of appropriate by-laws, election of officers, election of delegates to the Diocesan League and the enrollment of all available men as active League members.

Find an appropriate assignment of work for each member of the League and hold him responsible for its accomplishment.

Attendance.

Promote the attendance of men at all services and meetings of the Church.

Service.

Organize small groups of laymen in each parish or mission branch of the League who will pledge themselves to function as active aides to the Bishop and Clergy in doing needed Church work.

Relief.

Aid in the restoration to adequate private employment of men of the Church who have suffered in the economic changes of recent years.

Briefly reviewing this program and the extent to which it has been made effective, we find that the oldest of our parish and mission branches of the League are scarcely a year old and new ones have been organized continuously during the past year. As local details of organization has been completed, most of the Leagues have adopted the foregoing program, in whole or in part, supplemented by projects of purely local interest.

With their activities based on a well considered program, some of our Leagues have accomplished remarkable results. The expansion and growth of the League in the diocese is entirely due to work done in carrying out the plan outlined under "Organization" in the diocesan program. Several of the Leagues in neighboring parishes have done the pioneering necessary to arouse interest among the men and develop an organization, and one particularly active committee in a small parish has to its credit four new League.

Several Leagues are trying out plans designed to increase attendance of the men, not only at League meetings, but at Church services. If any of them prove unusually successful, we will be glad to share the news and advise how it is being done. Regardless of the success of any particular attendance plan, it is true that in the parishes and missions where the Leagues are active there is already a decided quickening of the interest of the men and a noticeable increase in the number of men at church services. In many instances the attendance at League meetings is remarkably good and in several of the branches an attendance in excess of 50 per cent of the male membership of the congregation is not unusual. Those familiar with Church affairs know that this augurs well in other ways.

Under the head of "Service," committees of the Leagues have sponsored several missions, worked with the rectors on confirmation instruction, developed Lay Readers, called on newcomers in their parishes and hunted up some of their own "lost sheep."

THE USE OF THE WORD "Relief" in the diocesan program may be a bit misleading. It is intended to mean relief from unemployment for members of our own parishes and missions by restoring them to adequate private employment and not to assist them in becoming attached to any of the various alphabetical agencies of the Government. Not many of our groups worked actively on this part of the program, but the accomplishment of one League in this respect was helpful to many in that parish, and the story of what they did and how they did it may interest and inspire you.

A committee of five, all actively employed business men, was formed. With the help of the rector, they made a definite list of the unemployed and secured from each of them a history consisting of personal, educational and business experience. This was assembled on a prepared form, similar to application blanks used by some corporations. Two hundred copies of each individual record were mimeographed, these were then mailed in sets to a mailing list made up of members of our church who were potential employers. This mailing list was prepared by the committee as a result of the examination of the membership lists of eight parishes and missions. This produced some results, but the complete success of the effort resulted from the fact that the interest of the entire congregation, particularly the men, was actively sought and secured to an unusual extent. The members of the committee were furnished with a surprising number of tips or leads about jobs from information picked up by members of the congregation in their business and social contacts, and this word-of-mouth campaign made it possible to end unemployment in that parish in less than sixty days. Not only was unemployment ended in that parish, but the committee was able to pass on news of many jobs to other Leagues and a number of men were put back to work in nearby parishes. This effort not only resulted in jobs for some people, but also developed the change in conditions that a job makes possible, plus a regained self-respect and a restored peace of mind. One Church member for whom work was found was not making a pledge. Soon after going to work he made a pledge and not only has he paid the amount of the pledge but by the first of November he had paid four times that amount.

The chairman of one parish finance committee which has recently completed its "every member" canvass stated it was the most successful one in his experience, because there was no difficulty in getting the men to serve on canvass committees. They called on their assignments promptly and obtained unusually good results. He gave the Laymen's League most of the credit, not so much for participation in the actual canvass, but rather for its educational and inspirational effect during the preceding year on the men of the congregation.

Among other things accomplished in some of the parishes where the League is active are the preparation of current and complete church membership lists, with addresses and telephone numbers for the use of the rector and the officers of the Church organization; the sponsoring of parish meetings; the distribution and periodic collection of pence boxes for some pressing local need; the organization and conduct of adult Bible classes; the holding of regular services in missions; sponsoring the study of church organization and the Church's program at League meetings.

THE GROWTH of the League in the diocese and its density of organization in Birmingham particularly command your attention. In this city there are organized and active branches in eight of its nine parishes and missions. This represents the most concentrated and uniform development of the League to date in any locality of the United States.

In May of this year this group of parish and mission branches of the League, joined by the Leagues from the parishes in Anniston, Gadsden and Tuscaloosa, Alabama, organized and conducted the first Retreat or Annual Conference of Laymen to be held under the auspices of the Laymen's League.

This Retreat was held at the country home of one of the members, was an all-day affair and began with a communion service celebrated by the Rt. Rev. Wm. G. McDowell, Bishop of Alabama, who was assisted by a number of the local clergy. This service was followed by an appropriate program, including addresses by men of prominence, such as Mr. Eugene E. Thompson, President, and Mr. Warren Kearney, Executive Secretary of the Laymen's League of the Episcopal Church, Dr. Larkin W. Glazebrook, representative of the National Commission on Evangelism, and Dr. A. R. Bliss of Howard College. There were in attendance approximately two hundred laymen.

The movement is under way in Alabama—the force responsible is the Laymen's League. The clergy of the parishes and missions where it is active are getting help and inspiration from a source and to an extent that is most gratifying. The lay authorities of the parishes and missions are finding that the League develops ready recruits for the many services required to be performed if our Church is to grow and take its proper place in extending the Kingdom of God.

It can be a help and inspiration to you—be you clergy or layman.

Advent's Aftermath

By ALICE BOWNE,

New York City.

THE ADVENT SEASON has come and gone. Did we breathe in its preparatory atmosphere? Were we fully equipped for the supreme birth of Christmas?

When a child is born in our family we fashion lovely clothes for it, we provide every comfort for its welfare, prepare in every possible way for its coming. Did we do less for the Child born in the world family on Christmas Day? We should have clothed Him in robes of righteousness woven by our own acts. Our lives are the golden thread weaving between the belief that He came once, and that surely He will come again, because He said He would, and our preparation for that coming should be a perfect pattern of human relations, advancing God's kingdom, witnessing to Him, and resting in Him.

We trust Him, but better still, He trusts us, trusts us to be ready for the coming into our hearts of this Spirit Baby, Jesus Christ. Let us turn these same hearts into nurseries of such enchantment as never greeted a baby before, so He may choose to stay with us until He grows to full stature in us. This divine nursery should be furnished with perfect human relations, manufactured from the perfect human relations between men and conditions. These will be perfect only to the degree that we love and obey the Child who came in spirit on Christmas Day, and who will come again in visible glory on the great day upon which all Advents will be swallowed up in arrival, and the opportunity of preparation will return no more.

While Advent and Christmas are now behind us for another year, the preparation of the first, and the "Coming" of the second remain potentially in all the fruitful year ahead, so let us set our chart with wisdom, that His coming may not be barren of results in us.

IF OUR standard of human relationships is based upon human needs rather than upon spiritual contacts, then surely we shall fail in our purpose here. St. Paul in his splendid eighth Romans tells us that they who walk after the flesh cannot please God because the creature was made subject to vanity.

It is interesting to note that Webster defines vanity as: "A state of emptiness, a want of substance to satify." So the creature was made under the dominion of, or subject to, a lack of substance to satisfy. To follow human impulses in human relations is building a house on the sand of human desire unmixed with the cement of divine cooperation and approval, human relations with God left out would reduce us to men and women of straw, scare crows whose foolish antics frightened away both crows and larks.

All force being primarily spiritual, man and woman walking on the borderland of the physical and spiritual worlds, must pull down the curtain upon material vision before cosmic rays can fall upon them. We are told that a physical force arrested becomes an expression of its spiritual significance, and that physical forces must be deflected, arrested before their spiritual realities appear. "Underneath each imperfect particular the shining perfection lies stretched in smiling repose", and man must sense this "underneath" consciousness, he must lift the cover of materialism before this smiling repose can rejoice his vision and steady his nerves and brain. One must be loyal to the unseen in a world of disloyalty; in other words one must be different, and instantly one is different one seesms to be cut off, but in this apparent isolation there is contained infinite wholeness.

When we find ourselves growing too dependent upon the things that are seen and touched, it is wise to give them up for awhile, indulging in nothing that masters us, enjoying it only when we can master it. Submission to an emotion which masters us enslaves us, mastery of the same emotion sets both us and the emotion free, free from bondage to the flesh. Then, and only then can the fulness of joy unfold in human relations. When two souls touch the contact is not made as though two flat substances touched at every point, but rather it is that the contact is made at a magnetic point on the curve of a living planetary circle. It is a pair of complementary opposites completing each other. They touch, then like a great wheel revolve away from each other only to touch again and again with added vitality and frequency as the wheel gains momentum, should it stop and leave them continually touching there would be no advancement. Like the revolving wagon wheel, each time it meets and leaves the earth at its point of contact, an advance is made, bringing with it all the impetus generated in the focal point at the center of the wheel. These increasingly recurring contacts are eternal moments, collected and guarded by God's Holy Angels, until the Christ Body is formed in human relations.

THESE RELATIONS are safe and sane only when their impulses are controlled by the power which comes from the focal point of omnipotence within each soul, the contacts which spring from that source are powerful agents in evolution bringing as they evolve undreamed of peace and beauty. It is the beauty of holiness, making whole the dissevered halves of human beings. There is a beautiful old legend that God created all souls pure spirit, male and female complete in one, but when He sent them to earth He divided them, all of the feminine qualities He called woman, the male qualities He called man. He well knew that they would be incomplete until they found each other on earth as He had created them in heaven. There would be no time in this quest, no age for the seekers as there is none in heaven, but aeons of earth time might pass before these dissevered halves were joined to their real other selves, for only God could guide them and protect them from the artificial lure of physical urge. So on and on they quested, making mistake after mistake, but they could never return to heaven until they asked God to lead them and join them again in eternal union, for only God could accomplish this.

Pure imagination? Yes, but the chambers of imagery must be entered before the "City lying foursquare" can be sensed, since the fourth dimension of that Holy City is unseen by human eyes, and human relations must visualize divine conditions to be foursquare. God works with infinite simplicity, but His thoughts are not man's thoughts, and He works under a different consciousness than man can attain unguided by the inspiration of Spirit. Human relations must be foursquare to be complete, dominated by the fourth dimension which is Infinity. In these relations we are to discharge our allegiance to our Lord's second great commandment, in which the word "Love" predominates. To love is a dangerous thing if we yield to the lure and enchanment of physical attractions, that was why our Great Counselor knew that before we could be trusted to love our neighbor we must first give our whole heart to God. He knew that the glory of love "which shall be revealed for those who love Him" will be revealed in us here and now, not at some future time. It will be a light in us generated by love of Him, which will shine as the sun shines upon all men, more perfectly where no physical shadows intervene, but like a beacon light witnessing to God, and bringing safety to all human relationships.

It is restful to know that we do not have to love those we despise (this has proven so impossible) but that the glory of God's love in us, if we let it shine through love of Him, will dissolve everything unlike itself in our human relations, not because of our own efforts, but in spite of them. So we make a plea to ourselves and to all mankind to get back to the Almighty, to cease our useless efforts to govern ourselves and the universe, to take our interferences out of the path of divine circuits, to deflect the shadows cast by imperfect thoughts and vain opinions, that as they are turned aside the glory of God may appear underneath the imperfect particular of man's thinking.

One day lived consciously in the Presence of God can adjust human relations eternally, and the joy of revealed reciprocal affinities would become too precious ever to relinquish. The knowledge that their attainment was impossible through human endeavor, would dissolve all that stood in the way of God's perfect adjustments. All our hopes centers in the wise Christ Child for whose arrival we have been preparing. Let us honor Him adequately with our fires burning warmly with the divine Log-os, our hands ready to work for Him, our souls cleansed and shining with His Light, our lives witnessing to Him for all men to see and glorify our Father in heaven.

"Then the Lord shall be unto us an everlasting Light, and our God our glory."

NEW YEAR GIFTS TO JESUS.

Oh, my darling! there are many
Who have neither time nor skill,
Gold nor silver, yet they offer
Gifts to Jesus, if they will.

Does it seem so strange, my darling!
Nay, dear, it is nothing new;
All can give Him noble presents;
Shall I tell you of a few?

Sometimes it is hard to listen
To a word unkind or cold,
And to smile a loving answer;
Do it, and you give Him gold.

Thoughts of Him in work or playtime—
These are grains of incense rare;
And no myrrh is half so precious
As the quick, upwafted prayer.

Then, my darling, will you tell me
You have still no gift to lay
At the feet of our dear Jesus
Any hour or any day?

Give Him now, to-day—forever—
One great gift, the first, the best,
Give your heart to Him, and ask Him
How to give Him all the rest.

—Selected.

GOD MEANS US TO BE CREATORS.

Edna Ferber, in her novel "Cimarron," makes one of her characters say, "There are some people who make the world, and there are others who just come along and live in it." This could never be possible for a real follower of Jesus Christ. "Never doing anyone any harm," which seems to be a satisfactory goal for some, is not enough. We must not only be good, we must be good for something. What are you adding to the life and character of your community? How are you going to help this New Year? Are you adding to the sum total of kindness—idealism—hopefulness—courage—honesty—of your city?

HIS BIRTH.

Florence C. Stevens.

The stars looked down on Bethlehem,
Their glory song His diadem,
Their words of peace His garment's hem:
For us they sing, as unto them—
That far-off day in Bethlehem—
In Excelsis Gloria!

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY

Mrs. W. Shelley Humphreys

National Board Considers Present and Future Work

This report of the meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary National Executive Board, held in New York, December 6-9, is but a brief resume of its work. The matters mentioned are by no means all those that were studied in the board meeting, not as matters of theory, but in the face of existing needs and situations.

An outsider who visits a quarterly meeting of the board at once becomes aware of a strong tide of world interest and deep concern for human values together with continuous effort to find ways of putting this interest and concern into practice. What practical work can Church women do, for instance, to establish more Christian relations between members of different races? What can be done to help answer the question raised by student groups, "What is the Christian message?" How can Church women further the cause of world peace? How can they learn the social needs of their immediate community, whether it be a city or isolated village, and having learned, what can they do about it? What can the women of the Church do, through their parishes and otherwise, to help meet the pressing problems of support and personnel in domestic and foreign fields? How can material be provided for the use of Church groups and leaders which is really within the scope of women who have only the slightest knowledge of the Church?

Other matters, more detailed, include such questions as: How can the Church make better use of Tuttle School graduates, many of whom are now absorbed into so-called secular social work, because specific Church positions are not available? What can and what should women do about pending legislation affecting human values, such as the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, the Pettengill bill to regulate block-booking and blind-selling in the motion picture field, the Tydings military disaffection bill, the revision of the neutrality act? How can the United Thank Offering be promoted?

Plans for Triennial and Days of Prayer.

Plans for the next triennial meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary in 1937, occupy an increasing part of each board meeting, though they are not yet definite enough to announce. The first steps were taken toward preparing for the Quiet Day for Prayer next Armistice Day, and attention was called to the approaching World Day of Prayer, observed by women's groups around the world on the first Friday in Lent. The Board continues its study of plans and policies for coordinating and stabilizing student work, and the study of policies in regard to qualifications of United Thank Offering appointees.

It is manifestly impossible, in the available space, to report the board's discussion of each of these subjects, but there is a simple process by which any woman may learn more definitely about anyone of them. Among the twenty members of the board are eight provincial representatives. These communicate promptly with all the diocesan presidents of their respective provinces after each board meeting, passing on to them the most important results, and the diocesan presidents inform the parish branches. Any parish officer, therefore, desiring further information, has only to ask her diocesan president or, if necessary, her provincial representative.

The board members and others receive an enormous amount of information and keep in touch with the work of the Church as a whole on the one hand and with the needs of the field at home and abroad on the other.

Presiding Bishop and Others Address Meeting.

The recent board meeting was addressed by Bishop Perry, Bishop Cook, Bishop Bartlett, and more briefly by Dean Kroll of Haiti, bishop-elect of Liberia. The Rev. C. Rankin Barnes described the policy and program of the National Council's social service department; Miss Eva D. Corey of Massachusetts and Miss Elizabeth Matthews of Southern Ohio, members of the National Council, were present much of the time; and one of the Woman's Auxiliary field secretaries, Mrs. D. D. Taber, reported in considerable detail about the work in nine dioceses where she has spent the past two years.

Through the standing committees of the board or through the secretaries at headquarters, information was received about several new publications on missions, on parent education, on religion and contemporary life, on peace education; or about new national movements and group activities of direct concern to any Churchwoman, such as the new United Student Christian Movement in this country and the commission established at the request of student leaders, on the World Mission of Christianity, or the new committee on social and economic justice which is concerned with the welfare of share-croppers.

National Conferences in January.

Attention is called to three national conferences meeting in Washington in January: The Council of Women for Home Missions, January 12 and 13. This is made up of cooperating women's boards. Miss Lindley is the Woman's Auxiliary representative. Work among migrants is under this Council, and as the board voted a small share in the salary of a new worker among migrants, the conference is of special interest. The National Rural Conference follows on the fourteenth to seventeenth. The Conference on the Cause and Cure of War will be held January 21-24. Reports of these are to be made at the February board meeting.

From its three members who represent the Girls' Friendly Society, Church Mission of Help, and Church Periodical Club, the board learned of the recent work and immediate plans of those societies. Plans of the Forward Movement were presented by the board's chairman, Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce, who attended the recent meeting of the Forward Movement's Women Associates.

From several parts of the country came reports of growing interest in retreats. Groups desiring to hold retreats are finding leaders frequently among their own number or among the clergy, the sisterhoods, deaconesses, and lay people.

NEWS FROM THE FRONT

Rev. G. W. Gasque

JAPANESE NIGHT SCHOOL PART OF SOCIAL WELFARE WORK IN BUSY CENTRE.

Kyoto, Japan.—The Rev. J. K. Morris, rector of the Church of the Resurrection, maintains a flourishing Night School as part of the Social Welfare activities carried on at that small but busy centre. The faculty numbers eight, five Japanese and three foreigners, and the School meets Monday, Wednesday and Friday nights of each week, from seven to nine o'clock, with an attendance of about twenty-five. It is an English Night School, the subjects being studied including Reading, Conversation, Translation and Grammar.

Two Study Periods Each Night.

There are two study periods of forty-five minutes each, with a thirty-minute interval between. During this interval a varied program is carried on. Monday night Mrs. Morris teaches singing, which the students love; Wednesday night there is a Chapel Service, consisting of a hymn in Japanese, a Bible Lesson and a short address by Mr. Horie, the Catechist at the Church of the Resurrection, these also in Japanese. On Friday night, Miss Thora Johnson, Physical Education Director at St. Agnes' School, teaches folk dancing, and all have a jolly time.

A Boy Contributes Savings.

This Night School was maintained last year, and among the students were some Koreans. At the end of this summer, Mr. Morris was surprised to have one of these students bring him Five Yen to be used in building the new Church. Knowing that the boy had very little, Mr. Morris soon learned the circumstances of the gift. During the summer this boy had gotten a job in the mountains, northeast of Kyoto, which lasted about fifty days, and for which the boy received sixty sen per day (about 19 cents). The boy's food and lodging cost him forty sen a day, bath and other incidentals ten sen, and the remaining ten sen he saved to give to the Church's building fund. This boy is not yet a Christian, but evidently has grasped the meaning of sacrificial giving.

CATECHETICAL SCHOOL TRAINS YOUNG MEN FOR MINISTRY.

Sagada, Philippine Islands.—The Catechetical School, begun at this place several years ago as an act of faith, to train young men to the work of catechists and future native ministry, has this year ten earnest young men taking the regular course. Two are in their last year of study, one is doing practical work in the field, two are in their second year of study, and five are freshmen. This is a very representative group, coming from stations as far away as Balbalasang and Upi, which indicates interest in a native ministry covering the whole Church in the Islands.

More priests are needed to teach, more books are needed for the library and prayers are asked, that the school will continue to grow, and that those now studying will be encouraged to go forward.

THE SANCTUARY.

It is suggested that every priest offer a prayer for a Missionary District at least once a week before the Altar at the Celebration of the Holy Communion, and that the priest and his people offer an additional prayer for the same District one or more times during the same week while at his private or family devotions.

Prayer for Mexico.

Almighty God, the Father of all mankind, we humbly pray Thee to be with Thy servant, the Bishop of Mexico, that Thou wilt bless him and his staff of faithful workers. Let Thy love and patience be shown forth in their lives and conversation, Thy tenderness and compassion in their words and actions, that they may win many souls for Thee; and kindle in us a hearty desire to join with them in our prayers and substance that we may have a part in the glorious task of extending Thy Kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

RETREAT CONDUCTED BY FR. DALE ATTENDED BY EVERY PRIEST OF THE NEVADA STAFF.

Reno, Nevada.—With all but one member of the Nevada staff present, the annual retreat arranged by the Bishop was held recently under the leadership of the Rev. O. B. Dale, S. S. J. E., at St. Philip's-in-the-Desert, Hawthorne.

Father Dale took as his theme for the meditations, "Joy," taking for the topics, "Joy of the Ascended Christ," "Joy in the Christian Living," "Joy in the Life of Prayer," and "Joy in Service."

The retreat opened on Monday noon, when the clergy gathered for three days and closed the following Wednesday. These retreats are looked forward to by the staff with great eagerness, and the mission building at Hawthorne is admirably suited to accommodate such a gathering.

During the recreat the social hall is turned into a dormitory, each member of the staff bringing his own cot and bedding; the meals are served in the apartment of the resident deaconess. Our Lord's exhortation to His apostles to "Come ye apart into a desert place and rest awhile," is literally followed in Nevada, for St. Philip's Mission is a beautiful spot on the desert at the edge of the blue Lake Walke in the shadow of the 11,000 foot high Mt. Grant.

With ideal weather during the week, and the undisturbed quiet of the place, the setting is an ideal one for such a retreat, and every one returned to his work greatly refreshed. Deaconess Crow, called home by the death of her eldest son, was the only member of the staff not present.

CHURCH IN JAPAN MAKES PLANS TO COMMEMORATE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY IN 1937.

Osaka, Japan.—On February 11, 1887, nearly forty-eight years ago, a group of courageous men and women, Japanese, English and American, came together at Osaka for the purpose of organizing the Holy Catholic Church in Japan, and thus the Japanese branch of the Church, known as the Anglican Communion, came into existence.

The General Synod, meeting in Sendai (north of Tokyo) last May, thought it proper and helpful that this anniversary should be commemorated. Plans have been formulated calling for two years of special effort for the growth of the Church. The year just preceding the anniversary date, February 11, 1937, is to be one of preparation. This preparation will consist of a concerted effort throughout the Church to deepen and strengthen the spiritual life of the Church and her present members. The year following the anniversary is to be used for extensive evangelistic effort aimed at the winning of new members. Very shortly after the anniversary day there will be a large gathering of members of the Church in Tokyo for worship, prayer and conference. There may be a similar meeting in Osaka.

On the twenty-third of September, Bishop Naide, of the Diocese of Osaka, initiated a special meeting of Church workers in the Kwansai (Central) section of Japan, for the purpose of considering plans and ways and means of pursuing this program. This was an all-day meeting, held at St. Paul's Church, Osaka, commencing with Holy Communion at nine o'clock in the morning, and ending with Evening Prayer at five o'clock in the evening. There were a number of addresses by Church leaders, followed by periods for general conference. About eighty workers were present, coming from various churches in the Kwansai District, and all spoke of the deep and happy spiritual atmosphere of the meeting.

BISHOP ROWE CELEBRATES HIS FORTIETH BIRTHDAY.

Nenana, Alaska.—Bishop Rowe celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday on the twentieth of November, and the fortieth year of his consecration as Bishop of Alaska on the thirtieth of November. The Alaska staff extended to him their sincere and affectionate good wishes, and pledged anew their loyal cooperation and obedience. In every mission and parish in Alaska on St. Andrew's Day the Bishop was remembered in a special Thanksgiving Service.

Bishop Rowe ranks fifth in precedence in the House of Bishops. Bishop Wells, who is retired, ranks first in years and consecration. Bishop McKim of North Tokyo, Bishop Graves of Shanghai, and Bishop Lawrence, retired, follow in the order named. It is to be noted that the three senior Bishops in active service are all missionary bishops from overseas.

The Rev. Albert H. Stone, head of Iolani School, Honolulu, recently presented a class of fourteen boys for confirmation to Bishop Littell, and two days later was celebrant for the school's corporate communion.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S FELLOWSHIP SERVICE LEAGUE

The Reverend Randolph F. Blackford

Plan of the Diocese of South Florida

Foreword: Last month we gave a sketch of the Georgia plan with its somewhat radical ideas. This month we give the more conservative plan of South Florida:

During the more than ten years in which the Y. P. S. L. of this diocese has been organized, it is felt that it has amply justified itself, not only in the number of young people it has brought into the life of the Church, but also in the number of our own younger members whom it has trained in the ways and teachings of their Church. At basis thistwofold effort of the young people's work must be kept in mind, first, to win and hold the interest of our own young people and those that do not go to church in the Gospel message of our Blessed Lord, as this Church has received it; second, to provide an adequate means for active Christian worship and service for the younger members of the Church, so that they may be trained in the fullness of the Christian life as they grow into maturity.

In accordance with the Young People's Service League throughout the Province of Sewanee we hold as our ideals the four ideals of worship, service, study and fellowship.

The ideals, of course, are interpreted in the motto, "Nonsibi, sed allis", which means, "Not for ourselves, but for others".

Realizing that true Christian faith is always expressed in actual practice, and that ideals are vague things unless they become definite rules for action, the diocesan organization has in the few years past developed a definite program in order to enlist the cooperation of each and every League and thus of each and every member, that they might expres sthese ideals in the five fields of service—the world, nation, diocese, community and parish.

Instead of the sporadic efforts of the various Leagues to make some necessarily small contributions in one field or another, we have tried to substitute a cooperative diocesan effort to make at least one worthwhile contribution in each of the five fields of service. Each year the parish and community projects are left up to the individual Leagues, with the approval of their rectors. The other three are picked up by a special committee and adopted by the executive board. Usually one of the three vice-presidents of the Diocesan League is put in charge of a specific project. With such a sytem we have been enabled in past years to do such diversified work as buying beds for the children's ward in St. Luke Hospital in Shanghai, providing an adequate theological library for our Church Seminary in Puerto Rico, contributing necessary furniture and equipment for various colored churches in this diocese, providing the use of a radio-victrola for our student center at the University of Florida, etc.

This year the projects assigned with additional, suggested work in the various fields were published as the following. It is to be noted that definite times are assigned for each project, and that in every case it is necessary that a League have at least one program on the field helped, in order that our active services may be intelligent ones.

One definite project in each field is assigned along with a program on each of these definite projects at your League meeting. Unless program is presented, credit will not be given on project.

I. PARISH: (Any convenient time.)
One definite service to be assigned by the rector of your parish.

II. COMUNITY: (Nov.-Jan.)
Contribute to a religious book or magazine for the public library. Program on Church Periodical Club suggested. Help underprivileged children —Program on city welfare work.

III. DIOCESE: (Sept.-Nov.)
Contribute $1.50 (per League) to assist the Rev. Mr. Smielau, who is working among the deaf in our diocese.

IV. NATION: (Sept. 1—completion.)
Each League to contribute $1.50 to be given to the chaplain at the State University to purchase books for student center.

V. WORLD: (Christmas to Lent.)
Aid St. Paul's Mission in Balbalsang, P. I.

Monthly reports are made on forms provided by each League to the Diocesan recording secretary, and on the basis of a summary of these reports awards are made to the various Leagues at the annual Convention and banquet. Further explanation may well be given of Bishop's Tests. These are annual Lenten efforts to encourage a Diocesan-wide expression of the ideal of study. Before each Lent the Bishop provides a subject and an outline of study which is carried forward in the League during Lent. Members are required to take a test arranged by the Bishop on the study suggested when Lent is over. A Cross is awarded to the individual member who submits the best examination papers in the whole Diocese, and an award made to the League who has the highest standard, taking into consideration the number of admitted members who take the test and their marks thereupon. In past years we have thus revived the Prayer Book, the ways and teachings of the Church, the Oxford and the Gospel according to St. Luke. Movement, the history of the Church and the Gospel according to St. Luke.

Three further union efforts contribute to the maintenance of interest in the League. There are District Leagues, which meet quarterly, and are composed of the Parish Leagues in any given Deanery of the diocese. Here it is that our young people come to know each other better and our diocesan officers have an opportunity to present the program of work to be followed.

The annual Convention is now held on the Friday and Saturday following Thanksgiving, although in years past it was held in conjunction with the summer camp. At the time of the Convention business is transacted and plans are made. In addition we have found time to have short instruction classes for League officers and counsellors. The high light for the young people themselves is the banquet, when awards are made, and the dance which follows. It is our plan to hold the annual Convention in different parts of the diocese each year so that as many young people as possible may become better acquainted with the work. Most successful has been our diocesan young people's camp, Camp Winghann. Seven sessions of the camp conference have been held, with from 40 to 100 young people in attendance. Here class work is provided, which aims to prepare the young people not only for the League work but also that they may become intelligent members of the Church as a whole.

Under the direction of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education credit is given for satisfactory work toward both diocesan diploma and the National Accredited Leaders' Association diploma.

Like all young people's organizations the great problem is to provide interesting and yet worthwhile programs for the weekly meetings. For the most part our efforts have been mainly in the field of dramatic programs, small plays and sketches, using several League members at a time in order to interest and use the group. Suggestions for such programs have been printed in times past by the Diocesan League, and a fuller effort is in process of preparation now by the provincial organization. At the same time we have attempted to accumulate a library of satisfactory programs with one of the diocesan counsellors as librarian.

All in all we feel that through the years we have found a partial solution at least to some of the problems presented by organized young people's work, and we try sincerely to have the young people themselves take the leading part in the plans and programs.

At this time a whole new field is being opened by the formation of Young People's Sevrice Leagues in our colored parishes and by the proposed formation of the coloredLeagues into a dioceanwide organization. This project is sponsored by a Diocesan League, and promises to be most successful.

A careful survey of the whole situation through the years past show the most glaring lack to be competent and interested adult counsellors. Often the clergy themselves are not vitally enough interested in, or are necessarily too busy to work with their own group of young people. But experience shows conclusively that where adult counsellors will give freely of their time and effort the League work is successful. As a consequence we in the young people's organization feel that here is one opportunity of activity in the Church where a great contribution can be made to the life of the whole Church by those adults who will take real interest in the young people and who will give freely of their time to help the young people to take their rightful place in the Church's work.

BOOK REVIEWS

THE LIVING CHURCH ANNUAL, 1936. Published by The Morehouse Publishing Company, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Pp. 672. Price: Cloth, $1.75; Paper, $1.40.

It is interesting to note the following comment taken from the Editorial of the Annual:

"Never before have so many decreases been indicated in the annual statistics of the Church. There are fewer postulants and candidates for Holy Orders, fewer lay readers, fewer parishes and missions. These decreases may indicate merely a consolidation of the work of the Church and a stiffening of the requirements governing the admission of men to the theological seminary.

"But what should give us cause for serious reflection is the tremendous decrease in the number of baptisms and confirmations."

According to this Editorial, there was a decrease of 3,099 baptisms over 1934 and a decrease of 4,466 confirmations as reported in 1934. The actual number are given and should be correct as they are taken from the official records of the various bishops and so are based upon an actual count.

The cheering statement that everywhere the Forward Movement is bringing new life and spiritual vigor to the Church and is perhaps the most encouraging feature of the life of the Church today, we are indeed thankful to learn.

The Annual is composed of the most valuable and useful information and hardly a clergyman or active layman would want to be without it.

PROPHET, PRESBYTER, AND SERVANT OF MANKIND. A Memoir of the Rev. Canon G. Osborne Troop, M. A. Published by his son, the Rev. George W. H Troop, Ashland, Kentucky.

This book is refreshing and invigorating. It is an impressive setting forth of the facts concerning the life of a holy man of God. To those who knew and loved Canon Troop, it comes with deep interest and delight. But it must prove of value to any, for apart from the inspiring record of a noble life, it is so beautifully written that it can be treasured for its literary merit. One is not wearied with profuse details, but with warmth of devotion and poetic fervor the life is made to speak for itself. And there is a valuable compendium of the teaching of Canon Troop on the cardinal points of evangelical faith.

Those of us in Virginia, who treasure the memory of the blessing that Canon Troop brought to us on the occasion of his visit, will prize the reference made to this visit in the book. The book makes delightful reading, and we believe will bring a blessing to all who read it.

KNOWING COMMUNITY BACKGROUNDS.

All ministers interested in an insight into the conditions and influences molding community life will be interested in a recent publication of the Virginia Agricultural Experiment tSation, Bulletin 299, "A Social Study of the Blacksburg Community." This can be had for the asking by addressing a card to the author, Dr. W. E. Garnett, Blacksburg, Virginia, or Dr. A. W. Drinkard, Director of the Experiment Station.

The population and economic foundations of the community's life, prevailing conditions as to standards of living, education, recreation and a number of other factors are analyzed at some length. The interrelationship of these factors are also strikingly shown. The membership in organizations including the churches was found to be closely related to the income and the living standards of the people.

One person in four had their names on the church rolls or approximately one-half of those ten years of age or over. Of the 540 families of the town reporting 26.9 per cent had no affiliation with any church group as compared to 28.8 per cent of the 649 families reporting from the rural district, even though there was a church to every 317 people. The town had an investment of approximately $195,000 in church property as compared to school property valued at slightly over $100,000, and until the recent erection of a new building, less than $50,000. The annual budget of all the churches amounted to around $30,000 as compared to a little over $20,000 for the school.

A study of 577 migrants from the community showed that they had gone to thirty-six other states and thirty Virginia counties and cities as well as to five foreign countries. Analysis of the size of families shows those with very low living standards, had approximately three times as many children as those with higher standards. The summary of the strong and weak points in the life of this community with suggested steps for its improvement should be helpful to all interested in community development programs, no matter where they live.

"Virginia's Marginal Population, A State Challenge," rural sociology mimeographed circule No. 2, is another publication which should be of interest to ministers, as well as "Negro Life in Rural Virginia from 1865-1934," Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin, 295. These may also be had for the asking.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN TOWN AND COUNTRY: By Goodrich R. Fenner. Art Paper. Pp. 160. Published by The Church Missions House, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Price, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

A much-needed manual for the country and semi-rural pastor. In cities, there is a stream of activity into which the churches are likely to drift with less need for purpose and plan. The people look for programs; they expect orderly services; they are in line with what is being done all around. But there is an atmosphere of isolation which threatens with inertia to choke the rural parish; and the rector must be the genius, to lay lines of approach and effect methods of service that will capture the attention, interest and devotion of the people.

The volume treats of The Rural Pastor; A Parish Program; Worship; Religious Education in the Rural Parish; Rural Church Extension; The Social Function of the Rural Church; and Towards a Diocesan Policy For Rural Work. Every chapter is a mine of value to the perplexed rector who would win and keep his people. The book having the imprimatur of the National Council entitles it to a studious reading and incorporation into the life of the country parish.

BE OF GOOD CHEER: By Herbert W. Bieber. Pp. 98. Price, 60 cents. Published by Wm. B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, Grand Rapids, Michigan.

This little volume contains six sermons that will inspire the reader with cheer. The preacher sanely makes faith the basis of a cheerful heart. A faith in a living God who has spoken by the mouth of His Son, Jesus Christ, saying, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." The sermon on "Confidence in God," from such a text as, "I will in no wise fail thee, neither will I in any wise forsake thee," Hebrews 13:5, is timely and well arranged. The promise of God, and faith in that promise fills the soul with cheer.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

Monica Williams.

Christmas Day! and do we blend
Our voices with the throng of men,
Who laud in joyful song today
A Babe who in a manger lay,
And then forget His humble birth
The Selfless gift of love to earth.

Or do we at the manger kneel
And pray some anguished heart to heal,
For Christ, who came from Heaven to men
To bring new life and hope again,
Oh, may we Lord at Christmas be
Through humble service, worthier, Thee.

A New Year.

A new year—from the spiritual point of view. So far as our secular lives are concerned, New Year's Day is just another New Year's Day—the opening of just another monotonous cycle of twelve months, each with its familiar repetition of weeks and days; perhaps bringing us fresh opportunities or experiences; perhaps merely a repetition of the old; perhaps not even that. Anyhow, is just another round of the months, weeks and days that we all know so well.

But this is not so in the case of the spiritual life. Here we have a totally different proposition—so different that it may represent the whole difference between a prospect that is black with gloom and despair, and a prospect that is bright and sparkling with hope and promise. A new morning—a new year. If taken from this point of view, we have here a prospect that should prove of tremendous assistance to many a man or woman who has not a very firm foothold on the Rock of Salvation, who will finish the old year in a spirit of doubt and diffidence, perhaps even feeling weighed down by the burden of shortcomings accumulated during the past years, forgetting that all sins truly repented of have been blotted out, failing to realize that the year about to start is not just another year, tacked on to the long chain of tarnished years which have preceded it. It is a new year—not just a fresh link, burnished and bright from the forger's anvil, welded to a chain of worn and discolored links already in use—like the fresh telegraph wire that you see sometimes on a railway line, added to a batch of weather-stained wires, its burnished copper gleaming in vivid contrast as you swing past in the train. No! it is a completely new chain, starting on the coming first of January, with its first link. The old chain has been completely scrapped. That is the prospect for every man, woman or child who believes—believes in the heart, not only in the mind—that the past has been blotted out, that though his or her sin be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow.

Anyone who really grasps this vital truth must find that it will make a world of difference to his outlook—to the attitude with which he prepares to shoulder the burden of life again on the coming New Year's Day. It is a brand new year. You know how, in our earthly lives, any experience that bears the stamp of novelty—something that has never occurred before—is bound to have an effect on account of the bare fact of its novelty. For us human beings, there is always an element of sensation in novelty—something that has never occurred before. And the same rule applies to our spiritual lives. We find this idea constantly recurring throughout the pages of Holy Scripture. Everywhere you may find evidence of the importance attached to anything that is "new". "A new commandment give I unto you." "The Lord's mercies are new every morning." "Put off the old man, and put on the new." St. Paul was constantly harping on the same note. "Be renewed in the spirit of your mind." "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature"—culminating in that impressive verse from his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold all things are become new."—Rev. H. W. Shepherd-Walwyn.

The Idea of Salvation in the World's Religions.

The comparative study of religion goes on apace with ever accumulating results of value. A work on the subject by J. W. Parker is reviewed in a recent issue of the London Times from which we extract and condense some of its principal views and results. Many theories of salvation have been held. In the early Church it was commonly held that Jesus gave His life as a ransome to the devil. Anselm taught that Christ suffered a vicarious punishment for our sins which satisfied God's wounded honor. Abelard maintained that Christ saved by His example, the moral influence theory.

Under the light of Mr. Parker's wide and deep knowledge of world religions various groupings of ideas begin to appear. First he finds the idea of "relief from pressing material wants." Next comes "escape from dread of evil powers." In the religions of India we find the dominant idea and aim is that of release from life and belief that happiness consists in escaping from existence. The ideas of relief from material wants and evil powers are sublimated in Christianity, but the Hindu idea of escape from existence finds no place in it which is optimistic in its vew of life. A deeper conception than release from life is "freedom from sin."

"Examination of these diverse ideas," concludes Mr. Parker, "some frankly incompatible, has always led round to the Person of Christ. The question hitherto avoided, Who is the last resort was Jesus Christ? is now faced; and Mr. Parker agrees with Dr. Rawlinson that the future lies, not with any reduced, watered down or attenuated version of Christianity, but with the full religious faith of the New Testament." A satisfying conclusion to a book of the deepest and most searching scholarship.

"A Prayer for Mothers."

For the Southern Churchmen.

Mrs. L. W. Strum.

Almighty God and Father, I come before Thee now to speak unto Thee about the children whom Thou hast given me.

They are very dear to me, and I earnestly desire that they may walk in the narrow way that leadeth to everlasting life.

But I feel my own ignorance and sinfulness, and I need Thy grace and wisdom to train them aright. Thou, O God, has said, "Ask and ye shall have". I do ask of Thee the gift of Thy Holy Spirit for myself and my children. Help me to set them a good example in word and deed. Create in each of them a clean heart, and renew in each a right spirit. Give to each a tender conscience; make them obedient, respectful, gentle and unselfish. Strengthen them to endure temptation, to speak the truth, to be diligent in their work, ever remembering that Thine eye is upon them.

Grant, O Lord, to each one of my dear children a sure trust in the precious blood of Jesus Christ as their only atonement, and clothe them each in the blessed robe of His righteousness. Watch over them, good Lord, by day and by night, in health and in sickness; and after they have served Thee on earth, take them to dwell with Thee in heaven.

I beseech Thee, O God, mercifully to hear my prayer, and grant me my heart's desire, for the sake of Thy dear Son, my Saviour. Amen.

A SONG OF THANKSGIVING.

By Ellen L. Lacy.

We thank Thee, Lord, for the year with the sunshine and the rain,
And for the glittering dewdrops and the ripening grain;
We thank Thee for the "manna" unfolding from above,
And for the gentle sweetness of Thy eternal Love.

We thank Thee for Thy Cross as it beams with Thy full grace,
Lifting us each day to the brightness of Thy face;
And for Thy steps of Love which are guideposts on the way
Showing us the hidden beauty of the eternal day.

We thank Thee for our dear ones worshipping at Thy feet,
And for the inspiration of Thy Love, a melody so sweet;
We thank Thee for the hope that shines in the darkest hour
Through Thy Cross of Love, to Thy grace and power.

So as the year is dawning, O Saviour ,let it be Another year of blessing, another year with Thee,
Until we shall adore Thee with our thanksgiving hymn of praise
For watching all our steps through the blessing of our days.

And some day we shall stand with life's lesson's known
In the rapture of Thy presence and worship 'round Thy Throne;
Then grandly shall we praise Him, as we sing of His cleansing blood
And gloriously shall we worship our Saviour and our God.

FOR THE CHILDREN

NEW YEAR'S EVE.

The evening how glorious in twilight's soft gown
With the stars for a necklace and the moon for a crown:
And grand are the hills as they march in a row,
With the fur on their capes made of fleeciest snow.

The winds are the minstrels and their harps are the trees,
And the whisper of lovers is heard by the breeze.
The snow comes a tripping with slippers of white,
For the New eYar is coming on the wings of the night.

The spires and steeples are standing about,
Like earth's altar candles whose lights have gone out,
And dark through the trees silver ladders hang low,
And the moon comes down softly to dance on the snow.

From the loom of the ocean, their soft wings all spread,
The clouds like great sea birds float gently o'erhead,
And down Time's corridor the old year so gray,
With a star for a lantern, is going his way.

And now heaven's anthems are caroled afar,
For the cylce of years brings a new minted star,
And the Old Year is strung on the anthems of time,
For the New Year is marching to the tune and the rhyme.

For the Southern Churchman.

Why Dorothy Waited.
Part II.

Eleanor Hammersmith.

At Christmas time Gramma Meta made her a new coat and hat and arranged her on the sofa with an air of expectancy. But no one came for her, and, indeed, very few people came at all that year, as there seemed to be little money to spend, and what people had they weren't able to spend on toys. The night before Christmas a man came in who wantd to buy some doll clothes, but when he saw Dorothy sitting on the sofa he exclaimed, "Say, I'll give you two-fifty for that doll right there as she is".

"But we can't sell her. She's waiting to be called for; the little girl will be coming back for her."

"She said though, that woman, to give it away, Meta. She won't be coming back now likely."

"And supposing she did, and the doll wouldn't be here?"

So time went on, and Gramma and the old man cared for Marie's baby and for other little girls' children day in and day out until the days grew into weeks and the weeks into months, into a year and at last into many years, until after awhile she became part of the family, and they almost forgot that she didn't belong there, that it was because she hadn't been called for.

One day Grampa Louie came in with a doll in his hand and complained of the darkness in the room; he took it to the window, but still failed to get a good light on it.

"Why, Louie, here, here by the window the light strikes her."

"But I don't see the cracks in her head."

"Come, I'll help you with it; I'll hold the head." But her hands trembled a little because she was thinking of the last doll he had fixed, the head not quite perfectly fitted together.

As years went on, Grampa found that his work wasn't as good as it used to be, that Meta had to help him more and more, and at last that fewer children came with their dolls now, sometimes they dropped in for a visit or to have a peppermint or some cider and popcorn; but Grampa was hardly ever as busy as he used to be. Some days there wasn't any fire in the stove, and the portraits over the sofa looked quite sad. Hansel and Gretel, the little Dresden figures on the what-not stand, seemed to have lost some of their gaiety, and Gramma Meta was thinner and forced to wear a shawl most of the time in winter. After many years had gone by, when Grampa Louie and Gramma Meta were very old, one Christmas season when the house seemed quieter than ever, when the days passed slowly, with many empty hours, a knock came at the door a day or so before Christmas, and a tall, jolly man stepped in. "I saw your 'Doll Hospital' sign, and I want to know if—I swan, what'll you take for that doll there—on the sofa?"

"She isn't for sale," said Gramma.

"Well, I'll give you my offer then. One hundred dollars for that doll. My sister has a collection, and I'd just like to give her that for Christmas."

"But we aren't selling her."

"You know its value, of course. That kind can't be bought nowadays. Two hundred dollars for it."

"Two hundred, Meta—we—"

"But, Louie, we can't; she's not ours to sell," she interrupted. "No, the doll is not for sale," she said again in a tone that ended the argument.

"I'll be back again; think it over."

So Marie's baby spent her twentieth Christmas on the sofa, her hair curled, her dress freshly ironed, her skirt in neat pleats—one of the family.

On Christmas afternoon a lady and a little girl called. They knocked at the kitchen door as the little girls had always done. The child was carrying a doll, and her face was stained with tears.

"Is Grampa Louie here?" the lady asked when Gramma Meta opened the door. "The dolls eyes have melted shut. Do you think he can fix her? She's just new today."

"Grampa Louie does very little work now—he doesn't see well, but I'll ask him. Please step in."

"You see, I remembered your place from long ago. I was here once with a doll of my own, but I wasn't able to wait for her, and I never got her. I told little Marie today about your workshop here. I wasn't even sure it would be here after such a long time. We hope you can fix her doll."

"Little Marie? And what is your name?"

"Marie, too, but you probably don't remember me; I was here years ago."

Gramma Meta led them inside and into the big sitting room, where the sun was streaming through the windows onto the stiff leather sofa.

"Why, Marie, there's Dorothy. She hasn't been waiting all these years? She's just the same, but I can hardly believe it; to think of finding her here after all this time."

"Oh, mother, isn't she darling? Can we take her with us? She must have thought you had forgotten her. Did you think she'd never come, Dorothy?"

"I never dreamed she'd still be here. Her coat is new—I remember how much I wanted to get her one in Chicago, but Aunt Janet bought me a whole new doll instead. She was much bigger, and all I thought of was that the coat wouldn't fit Dorothy. I hoped for more than a year that I could come back some time, but we never visited here again so I never could. I must owe you a lot for her new clothes and for her room and board."

"Oh, no," Gramma answered. "She's been no bother at all; we liked having her, eh, Louie?" And we kept her just for you in case you'd come back."

"She's just darling, mother. She may have my new doll bed and the chair Amy has. May I have her, mother?"

"Yes, of course, dear, and I know you'll love her, too."

After they had gone, Gramma turned to Grampa Louie and took hold of him by the shoulders. "Smile, Grampa; aren't you going to smile? Why, little Marie has finally found her baby; that's why we kept her so long."

"True enough, but I can't help but think about that man a little. After all, she didn't hope to find her now; she wouldn't have cared so terribly if the doll had been gone. She's grown up, and what is a doll to her?"

"But Grampa, to think—imagine her coming now, after all this time, and if the doll had been gone. If we'd had to say we had sold her away! Would you have it so?"

"No-o-o-o. But you will be cold this winter."

"Cold, yes, but think if I couldn't have given her the doll."

That night after supper they were still talking about the doll and little Marie's coming back, when there was a knock at the door, and someone who couldn't wait for them to answer, burst into the room. It was the tall, jolly man who had been there before, who had been willing to pay two hundred dollars for Dorothy.

"I say, folks, I've come back to buy that doll—"

"But it's gone," they both interrupted him. "She was called for this afternoon and taken away."

"I mean I've come to pay for it. When my sister Marie walked in with it today, I knew it was the same one—and you gave it to her in spite of my offer. No Christmas present could have given her half the pleasure of finding it here. A merry Christmas to you, folks!" He laid something on the table and was gone before they could even speak.

Gramma opened the door and looked out after him; there was no sign of him anywhere; only a fine covering of white Christmas snow was sifting down, and it might all have been a dream, but the two hundred dollars were on the table.

Tommy's Christmas Stocking.

The Christmas night was closing, in sweet and white above the world. In a thousand homes, by a thousand chimneys, little stockings hung. In a thousand homes, a thousand little childhearts beat with hope and a thousand little faces flushed at the joyful thought of what Christmas would bring.

Tommy sat by the window and looked out at the fair white world, the cold white streets and the snow-capped lamp-posts with their eyes of blinking light. Then drawing the soft rug of the window seat closely about him, he looked over at his little pair stockings by the fireplace, and sighed in happy content.

He was all ready for bed and Mother had let him come downstairs to add a postscript to his Santa Claus letter Now he was waiting while Mother went to attend the Baker's Boy. It was of that letter that Mother was thinking as she went to answer the Baker's Boy.

Tommy had told Mother all the words slowly and she had written them, for Tommy was such a little boy yet, and his letter was a rather long one.

Tommy was the only boy in this lovely family, but then, there was a jolly best sort of a father, and the dearest and most beautiful of mothers, the sweetest of grandmothers, and the most loving of grandfathers—to say nothing of Uncle Ned and Aunt Nellie, and lots of now-and-then people.

And this was what made Mother look thoughtful: In Tommy's letter there was no mention of anyone but just Tommy and what Tommy wanted.

Mother had said very gently, "And now what shall I write to Santa Claus about Grandma?"

"Oh, nuffin'."

"Let me see. She has not hung up her stockings. I suppose any message would have to come through Tommy." But Tommy was silent.

It was just then that the Baker's Boy rang. Mother brought him in and told him to sit by the fire while she took the big package from his cold hands.

He was a very big boy—so it seemed to Tommy—but he seemed a very little boy to Mother, and his feet were cold and wet, and his cap too small, and there was a space between his mittens and his sleeves, leaving his wrists red and bare.

Mother brought him hot milk to drink, and asked him if he was going to hang up his stockings tonight—looking across as she spoke at the little figure curled up in the soft rug of the window seat.

But the Baker's Boy said: "Oh, no, ma'am. Christmas ain't for us." And he went out again into the fair white world which seemed to look colder to Tommy after the Baker's Boy stepped into it. Mother followed him, and Tommy could hear the murmuring of her voice asking gentle questions, but he could not hear the words.

"Would you care to ask Santa Claus for something for anyone else?" Mother asked when she returned. "You may leave out just some little thing, you know, and ask for something in its place, for some other little boy if you wish."

A queer sort of feeling, uncomfortable and heavy, came in Tommy's chest, and a choky feeling in his throat, and he was silent a minute. Then he said with an attempt at cheerfulness: "No, I guess not. Probably all the other boys can write some letters if they want to. I guess I'll go to bed."

Mother took Tommy's hand and they went up to his pretty room with its lovely hangings, its soft rug, its little bed and wide windows.

"Good night, little son," was all she said after his prayers were said, but Tommy knew that Mother was disappointed. He did wish the Baker's Boy had not come. Everything was so beautiful before that, with the lovely white world, and Mother's face, and the flickering fire, and Christmas Eve—and his own stockings hanging by the fireplace. He wanted a number of things and he dropped off to sleep thinking of them.

It was then that the strange thing happened: Tommy suddenly found himself downstairs in the wide window seat once more, cuddled down under the red rug and looking out at the white Christmas world, while the firelight flickered and shone upon the wall.

He turned to look once more at his stockings. Wonder of wonders! There were his stockings, and hanging close beside them were two bigger, longer stockings. They had big holes at the knees and at the toes. He knew them at once for the Baker's Boy's stockings. It was seeing the big holes in the knees that had made the lump come to his throat. His own stockings were crowded to the very top, and things were spilling over to the floor, while the stockings of the Baker's Boy were limp and empty.

But the very wonderful part of the matter, the part that made Tommy sit up and rub his eyes hard to find out if he really saw aright, was this: All the gifts and toys had queer little heads and wings, and they were talking in little squeaking voices.

"Ho! ho! ho!" cried the skates, with a soft clashing of laughter. "It is Christmas Eve, and Santa Claus put me in the wrong stocking. Such fine bright skates were never meant for a selfish boy. I want to go to a boy who lends his toys." And with a flutter of wings the skates rose, sparkling in the firelight, and flew straight to the Baker's Boy's stocking.

Tommy gave a gasp and held his breath. He could hear the other gifts talking in pretty, piping voices "Well, I know this," said a beautiful ball, "one of my brothers was blamed sadly last month for going through a big plate-glass window, and now Santa Claus is going to give me to that same boy who threw my brother-ball. Now I may be put where I am not wanted, and thrown in the mud by some shopkeeper, as he was, unless I find a safe owner. I think I will follow the skates."

The ball lifted his dainty wings, and popped up his queer little head and flew across to the Baker's Boy stockings, looked so fat and jolly and lovable that Tommy cried out in disappointment.

Now the sled was talking: "I wish Santa Claus would ask us where we want to go. I was intended from the very beginning, to be given to a little boy who loves to run errands for his mother. There isn't a finer sled in town than I am. I am broad and light and strong, and just the thing for a boy who loves to carry parcels for his mother, or to give another boy a ride. I think I will just fly over to the Baker's Boy's stocking."

The sled rose so lightly on its wings that Tommy could scarcely keep from crying out again as he thought how wonderful it would be to ride on a sled with wings! And, why he could do errands for Mother! Only he had not thought much about it before.

Then other toys began talking and suddenly Tommy stretched out his hands towards them and cried out:

"Oh, please don't go flying away, all of you, to the Baker's Boy without giving me a chance. I do not need you all. I really wanted to give something to the Baker's Boy. I want to write my letter all over . . ."

But every little funny head had drown back, frightened. Every little voice was still. The fire went down low, and the room was very still—all but the "tick-tock, tick-tock" of the little cuckoo clock.

But the cuckoo clock was in Tommy's own room, and he was—yes, he was in his own little bed and Mother's arms were close around his little body, and she was saying:

"There! there! Tell Mother all about it. What has my little son been dreaming about?"

Then Tommy looked all around his room, with his pretty rugs and the little brass bed, and knew that he had been dreaming. And he was glad, very glad, that still he had a chance.

He brushed the tears away and cried out: "Oh, Mother dear, please make a light and get me a pencil quick. I want to write my letter to Santa Claus all over."

And Mother knew as she went for the pencil to write the new Christmas letter that while her little son slept, the Christmas Angel had visited him.

SING WE TO HIM A LULLABY.

Sing we to Him a lullaby,
Who sweetly sleepeth
Where Mary, dear, His mother mild,
Her fond watch keepeth.
Sing we to Him a lullaby.

Sing we to Him all tenderly,
Dear Babe, Who lieth

* * *

Upon His mother's loving breast
Whence all fear flieth.
Sing we to Him all tenderly.

Sing ye to Him, angelic host,
Who now assaileth
The home and power of Satan's might
Which yet prevaileth.
Sing ye to Him, angelic host.

Sing ye to Him, oh shepherds, sing!
Your Shepherd liveth,
Who for His strayed and wandering ones
His own life giveth.
Sing ye to Him, oh shepherds, sing!

Yea, sing we all in ecstacy!
Our God appeareth
To us in lowly form;
Our praise He heareth.
Yea, sing we all in ecstacy!

The Bear's Bath-Tub.

Several years ago someone threw away a portable zinc bath-tub when leaving Giant Forest, Sequoia National Park, California. The tub was rescued from the dump and taken to the bear feeding-place by the keeper, Ed. Metzgar, and filled wtih water.

The bears enjoyed their baths very much on hot days, and their antics amused the hundreds of visitors immensely. Later the National Park Service built a large sunken cement pool for them, hauling water in a tank half a mile to fill it every day.

Forty or fifty bears come in from the woods at feeding time to eat scraps from garbage collected through camp and hotel grounds. Seats are provided for visitors, and at times in the afternoon over a thousand persons are watching the bears eat or bathe. A ranger-naturalist gives a very instructive and entertaining talk about California brown bears and their habits.—Our Dumb Animals.

FEEDING THE BIRDS.

Louise Marston Sturtevant.

I never knew that birds could be so hungry,
They flutter near my windows all day long,
Such appetites
These feathery mites,
Filling the air with song.
Bread crumbs, grain and suet
Swiftly disappear,
But I'd gladly give them all I have,
Just to see them near.
Chickadees and juncoes,
Tree sparrows, and the jay—
We really do not want him
But he can't be kept away.
A sick old crow with drooping wings
Sought shelter near our door,
Downy little woodpeckers
Greedily asked for more.
Soft and furry squirrels,
Geese and mallard duck,
No matter how the storms rage,
They surely are in luck.
So each day through the season
I feed this great array,
And those who come a'calling
Are never turned away.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE

BISHOP MANNING'S INTRODUCTION TO THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK.

The remarks of Bishop Manning at the Sunday morning service, December 15, 1935, at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, prior to the sermon of the Archbishop of York: In my own name, and in the name of all our clergy and people, I welcome to this Diocese and to this Cathedral the Archbishop of York, who is the preacher at this service.

We welcome the Archbishop personally, on his own account, because of the things that he stands for, and the leadership that he has shown in meeting the problems and questions of this present time. It has been said recently, and with entire truth, that owing largely to the character of its two Archbishops, the Church of England is a greater moral force today than it has been at any time since the Reformation.

We welcome the Archbishop also because he comes to us from the city and diocese of Old York, and from that glorious Minster on the site of which for 1,300 years—since the year 627—the Holy Catholic Church of Christ has continued its unbroken life and history and has faithfully offered up its worship and administered the sacraments in Christ's name. Last, and not least, we welcome Archbishop Temple because he comes to us as the representative of our Mother Church of England, the Ancient Historic Church of the English people.

From the Mother Church of England we received the Gospel of our Lord and of His Church, the Threefold Ministry of Bishops, Priests and Deacons and the Divinely Instituted Sacraments, as these are given to us in our Prayer Book, and as they have come down to us from Apostolic days.

I ask the Archbishop to carry back our greetings to our brethren in England, and to tell them that our prayer is that the fellowship between Great Britain and America may be based more and more upon the foundations of true religion, and that based on that foundation and guided by that power, the ties which unite the English speaking peoples may grow ever stronger, not for their own selfish advantage, but for the spread of peace and brotherhood, and for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God among men of all races, nations and colors throughout the world.

FORWARD MOVEMENT NEWS NOTES.

Cincinnati—A list of twenty-four opportunities for boys and girls to share in the work of the Church is one of the features of "Youth and Education", a booklet issued by the Forward Movement Commission.

The booklet provides a program for a Forward Movement in the Church School. It is one of the two booklets prepared by the Department of Religious Education, National Council, for use from Epiphany to Ash Wednesday. This booklet is supplied at the rate of ten cents a copy from 223 West Seventh Street, Cincinnati. The other, "Your Parish and Its Young People", is available at the rate of five cents a copy.

Youth and the Church is the theme of Forward Movement literature during this period. The manual, "Forward—Day by Day", has as its subject, "Growth and Learning in Home and Church".

The opportunities listed in "Youth and Education" are: the choir, junior choir, work as class officers, work in class committees, as distributors of Church literature in the parish, sending Christmas gifts to mission fields and other places, sharing in a parish party for all, helping in community projects, as members of a pupils' council of the church school, serving on the altar guild, distributing Hymnals, Prayer Books, etc., in Church or church school, acting as waiters at a parish dinner, editing and issuing a parish paper, assisting mothers in work in Women's Guild or Auxiliary, helping in Every Member Canvass, building up a parish library, improving church grounds, taking part in plays or pageants, belonging to study classes and discussion groups, attending church or camp or conference, visiting diocesan institutions, working for diocesan institutions, belonging to parish organizations other than church schools, collecting and saving money for missions in Lent.

Cincinnati—The Advent-Christmas number of "Forward—Day by Day" proved extremely popular with adults and children. Many church schools ordered thousands of copies for distribution because of the creche cut-outs in the center of the manual.

The circulation of this number of the manual was about 420,000 copies.

"The Coming of the Light," the special Christmas booklet published by the Commission, also was popular with the church schools because of its cut-out figures, so much larger than those in the manual, and the beautiful art work. About 90,000 copies were distributed.

Alexandria, La.—The Rev. W. S. Slack, D. D., rector of St. James' Church here, used the Forward Movement manual, "Forward—Day by Day", while conducting the devotional period over radio station KALB. He distributed many copies of the manual as a result.

"I find the booklets exceedingly helpful in my own daily devotions, and scores of people also tell me they find the booklets helpful.

"I feel that it is a godsend to the Church, for it is doing for the Church that which previously many of our people, groping in the dark, have been trying to get from publications outside the Church."

Albany—Bishop Oldham, of Albany, in urging his clergy to order copies of the Forward Movement manuel, "Forward—Day by Day", for distribution in their parishes, wrote them that if they were unable to finance the cost, "just send the bill to me and I will gladly take care of it".

"Of course, I know every parish cannot follow precisely the same program," he wrote, "but I am also certain that these manuals, properly used, will encourage and help our people to read their Bibles and say their prayers, which appear to me to be most important things. Certainly without them their can be no spiritual revival such as we are longing and praying for."

Cincinnati—Busy Churchmen who read their manual, "Forward—Day by Day", while commuting will be especially pleased with the Epiphany Pre-Lent number.

The Forward Movement Commission, in response to the pleas of this group, has included before each daily meditation a portion of the Scripture for the day. This had been suggested by many persons who said they read their manual while on trains or street cars, and that they were unable to refer to their Bibles.

Hundreds of parishes already have ordered their copies of this number so there will be no delay in distribution to the people.

PILGRIM'S PROGRESS MADE A TALKING BOOK FOR THE BLIND.

The American Tract Society recently recorded Pilgrim's Progress as a Talking Book for the Blind. The reading was done by the general secretary, Dr. William H. Matthews, at the Talking Book studio of the American Foundation for the Blind. Twenty-five sets of records, costing $12.00 per set, were sent as Christmas presents to various institutions for the blind. A special fund was raised by the Society for this worthy enterprise, so that the blind can purchase sets of these records at a fraction of their original cost. It is interesting to know that the American Tract Society appropriated $1,000.00 in the year 1836 for the printing of Pilgrim's Progress in raised letters. About the same time the Society printed the Dairyman's Daughter and Baxter's Call in raised letters. Next year the Society will begin a new century of service for the blind.

LORD JELLICOE'S SECRET.

"The secret of his quiet and unselfconscious confidence was, I know, his simple and manly faith in God, who was ever in his remembrance, to whom day by day he turned in prayer, and in whom he found his strength and stay."

Such was the simple, unadorned tribute paid by the Archbishop of Canterbury to Lord Jellicoe at the funeral service at St. Paul's recently. The great admiral did not "wear his heart upon his sleeve", but to those who knew him intimately he would speak freely and frankly of the deepest things of life. His faith was simple, strong and buoyant and he never compromised. In another sentence the primate lifted the veil of those tremendous war days when he said:

"As day by day I went among the ships in his command there was one unbroken testimony given: that he had made his comrades of all ranks, from the highest to the lowest, a band of brothers, bound together by an absolute confidence in his leadership and by a loyalty to him which had the warmth of love."

There stands the man as the British Navy knew him. It is not our purpose to try to assign Jellicoe's place in history. We have neither the knowledge nor the capacity and the time has not come. One fact is certain—he will always stand out as the single-minded, fearless hero of Jutland. His action during that terrible battle has been praised and criticized, and during the next century the pros and cons will continue to be discussed. Jellicoe's greatness was manifested in his regard for those committed to his care, both in the services and at home, while the indisputable fact remains that after Jutland the German Navy "was no more seen"!

SIXTEEN OTHER RELIGIONS REPRESENTED AT HOBART COLLEGE.

Forty per cent of the students at Hobart College, Geneva, have professed their adherence to the Episcopal Church, with 22.5 per cent of the 120 Episcopalians on the campus preparing for the ministry. Although the undergraduate body is predominantly Episcopal, and the registration of the college is restricted to 300 students, nevertheless, 16 other religions, ranging from no religion at all to Confucianism, are to be found on the campus.

The original charter of the college provides that no ordinance, rule, or order of the board of trustees shall "extend to exclude any person of any religious denomination whatever from equal liberty and advantage of education, or from any of the degrees, liberties, privileges, benefits or immunities of said college on account of his particular tenets in religion", with the result that there is an average of one different religion for every eighteen students on the campus.

Besides the Episcopal faith, other religions represented on the campus are Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Christian Science, Evangelical, Hebrew, Lutheran, Orthodox, Confucian, Church of Christ, Danish Lutheran, Dutch Reform and Universalist. Six of the stucents profess to have no religion at all.

"RENEWED LIFE."

Work Among Lepers.

The sixtieth annual report of the Mission to Lepers, entitled Renewed Life, summarizes much interesting news about the treatment of leprosy and the progress which has been made in various countries. Of the disease itself, the report says: "Leprosy will not be stamped out in a few generations. Prevailing economic conditions, pressing so hardly as they do on those least able to face them, have a large part in retarding progress in the fight against disease, and especially so in the case of leprosy. Large numbers of underprivileged people are physically unable to offer effective resistance to infection. There is, moreover, in many countries widespread ignorance of the simplest laws of hygiene. These two important factors alone seriously retard effective action."

Progress All Over the World.

In India the earthquake involved two of the Mission's Homes and severely damaged them, though happily no lives were lost. The work has extended considerably, and "the fact that we are now caring for a larger number of lepers in India than at any time in our history shows that we are serving these needy men and women to an increasing extent."

The growing interest in measures to deal with leprosy in China is a cause for encouragement. Within the past few years valuable work has been done at a number of main centers by way of education of the public concerning the disease.

It is in the country districts where leprosy is prevalant, and if the disease is seriously to be attacked and its victims relieved and treated, it is in the country areas where this will be most effectively done. There can be no question that the present interest owes its inception and stimulus almost wholly to the work of the Mission to Lepers in the past.

Progress is also reported from Japan, Korea and Formosa. In Africa the Mission's efforts now extend to fifteen different African countries and colonies, where it is responsible for the relief of lepers and their children or making grants for this purpose. This marks definite advance.

The financial statement shows that the total income from all sources was £78,698, which included gifts received for special objects, and £10,542 received from legacies. The total expenditure for all purposes was £76,658.

Lecturers in Philadelphia.

The Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, D. D., Canon of St. John's Cathedral in Providence, will give a series of lectures in St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, on the Monday nights in January, beginning at 8:15 o'clock. Each lecture will be preceded by an organ recital by some prominent local organist.

The subject of Canon Bell's course will be: "A Churchman Looks at the Modern World." The sub-titles will be:

January 6—Modern Man.
January 13—Modern Industry.
January 20—The State and Christianity.
January 27—The Contemporary Church.

In this course the lecturer will treat of the Church and of Christians in relation to such matters as science, economics, communism, war, capital and labor, divorce, eugenics, birth control and many other problems that confront the modern Churchman.

No one in the American Church is better fitted to deal with these subjects than Canon Bell.

The lectures are given under the auspices of the Lecture Foundation of the Ellis Hornor Yarnall Library of Theology of St. Clement's Church.

No tickets of admission are being issued. A silver collection will be received at each lecture.

TWENTY NEW CARDINALS.

The college of cardinals, whose number has run down from a theoretical seventy to an actual forty-nine, is to be reinforced by the appointment of twenty new cardinals at a secret consistory which was to have been held on December 19, according to an announcement from Rome. Fifteen of the twenty are Italians. Of the other five, two are French, one is Spanish, one Czech and one Argentine. With these new appointments, the Italians will be in a majority by thirty-nine to thirty. While this predominance of Italians will certainly provoke unfavorable comment from non-Catholics who are also non-Italians and will suggest that the Roman Catholic Church is still, in its high command, an Italian institution, it is really not so significant as might be supposed. The cardinalate represents a dignity rather than a function. A Bishop who is a cardinal has no more authority either within his diocese or outside of it than a Bishop who is not a cardinal. The college of cardinals as a whole is neither a legislative nor an administrative body. Its sole function is that of electing the Pope. That is, to be sure, a very important function. The chief significance of the Italian majority in its membership is that it makes still more certain the election of an Italian as successor to the present incumbent. But that was already as certain as anything could well be aside from the multiplication table and the axioms of mathematics. Occasional rumors are heard of the possibility of an American Pope. But the wind is not blowing in that direction. The number seventy, for the college of cardinals, is sometimes thought of as being peculiarly sacred and representing some ancient tradition. But in reality it goes back only a little over three hundred years. It was Sixtus V, Pope from 1585 to 1590, who enlarged the college to that number.—Christian Century.

THE COMING OF KAGAWA.

The presence of Toyohiko Kagawa in America during the next few months should prove a spiritual blessing to our people in many ways. He will be a great evangelistic influence, bearing witness to the transformation which Christ has wrought in his own life and calling others to Christian discipleship. He will be a living illustration of the significance of the foreign missionary movement, for, apart from it, there would be no Christian Kagawa today. He will be a powerful stimulus to making the Christian religion a more vital force in our social and economic life. Perhaps no one in our generation has devoted himself more selflessly to the masses of the people or shown more clearly what Christianity means for the redemption of society.—Federal Council Bulletin.

DRUNKEN DRIVING.

As President Roosevelt called a national conference to seek causes and find cures for our terrific accident death toll, the "New York Times" published a report of Dr. Theron W. Kilmer, a police sergeant, who said that drunken driving has increased forty-five per cent in the nation since repeal. His figures are based on information received from commissioners of motor vehicles of every State issuing driving licenses. In one State the increase was 200 per cent; in another, 113 per cent. Only the District of Columbia was able to report a reduction in drunken driving. In Dr. Kilmer's opinion, the intoxicated motorist is the greatest danger on the highway today.—Christian Advocate (Nashville).

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Manning, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd, D. D., Suffragan
Rt. Rev. Chas. K. Gilbert, D. D., Suffragan

Lecture Courses.

The Rt. Rev. William T. Manning, D. D., Bishop of New York, will give a series of addresses on the general topic, "The Christian in This Modern World", on Wednesday afternoons during the Epiphany season in St. Bartholomew's Community House. These addresses are being given in connection with the Forward Movement of the Church.

The public lecture series of the Catholic Laymen's Club of New York will be given this year at the Church of St. Mary the Virgin. The lecturer will be the Rev. Bernard Iddings Bell, Canon of St. John's Cathedral, Providence, R. I. There will be two lectures, one on January 15 and the second, a week later, on January 22. The lecture will be given at 8:15. The topic is "A Catholic Looks at the World."

The Rev. H. W. B. Donegan, rector of St. James Church, is preaching a series of sermons on the general topic, "Poet-Preachers". In announcing this series he has said, "The mighty truth of Christianity escapes full expression in ordinary language. Moments of vision transcend earthly speech, and words are but a lame and halting means by which we try to share with others our richest exprerience. But in every age there have been those who have better than others articulated what many followers of the Master have felt. Listening to them we are able to see more clearly the path we should follow, in the service of the Master, and are encouraged to be true to His purpose for our lives".

The subjects of the complete series are as follows:

"Poet-Preachers."

Dec. 15—"Kindler of America's Spiritual Life."

Church Missions House Staff Holds Quiet Day.

Quite in the spirit of the Forward Movement the staff at Church Missions House had a Quiet Day this year on December 17, instead of the conference on office and departmental affairs, to which they have usually given a day.

Through the kindness of the rector of St. Bartholomew's, the Rev. Dr. George P. T. Sargent, the chapel of St. Bartholomew's was used for the services and the parish also provided lunch for the entire staff.

After the celebration of the Holy Communion, at which Bishop Cook and Rev. Dr. Hobbs officiated, the meditations and intercessions were led by the Rev. Edmund L. Souder of St. John's Church, Hankow, China. His theme was fellowship, personal, social and international, and his many years of intimate association with Chinese life, through revolutions and in the midst of communist activities, gave much point to all, he said.

This is almost the only occasion in the year when the entire staff can meet together. Many parishes are represented by the staff.

District Young People's Conference.

The Young Peoples Conference of District No. 3 in the diocese was held at St. John's Church, Wytheville, on Saturday, December 14. Thirty-two were registered, including representatives from Abingdon, Bluefield, Dante, Marion, Pulaski and Wytheville.

The meeting opened with a devotional service, led by the Y. P. S. L. of St. John's; Allen Jett Sharitz, president of the Wytheville League, presiding, with Jean Bourne as acting secretary. Mr. Sharitz explained the ten-point standard of the Diocesan Young People's Service League, explaining that a Parish League making eight of the ten points is considered a Standard League.

The organized leagues which were represented reported on their work.

The theme of the Conference was "Forward Together". One of the objectives of the Forward Movement is active discipleship. The Rev. Chas. W. Sydnor, of Pulaski, made an address on "What is the Meaning of Discipleship", and the Rev. John A. Winslow, of Dante, spoke on "How Can a Disciple Serve Today?"

The Rev. Devall L. Gwathmey, D. D., chairman of the Diocesan Department of Religious Education, announced that the work of the young people falls under that department, and that the Rev. J. F. W. Feild, of Christ Church, as an associate member of the department, has charge of young people's work in the diocese.

Dr. Gwathmey also announced that Miss Dorothy May Fisher, the national secretary for Young People's Work, will lead a conference of counsellors and advisers, which will be held in Roanoke in the near future.

Charles Weisfeld, of the Y. P. S. L. of St. Thomas' Church, Abingdon, led the noonday prayer. Lunch was served by Group 2 of the Woman's Auxiliary.

CHICAGO.

Rt. Rev. George Craig Stewart, D. D., Bishop.

Children's Christmas Benefit at Hotel Sherman.

Nearly 1,000 needy children from church settlements and parishes of Chicago got a glipse of the other side of life on December 19 when the Church Club staged its annual Children's Christmas Benefit at the Hotel Sherman. The group came primarily from church institutions and settlements—Cathedral Shelter, Chase House, House of Happiness and St. Luke's Hospital.

Brought to the hotel by the laymen, the children were given a hearty dinner, entertained, heard a message from Bishop Stewart, heard one of their group—an Assyrian boy—recite the Christmas story, received gifts and then were taken back to their homes or institutions.

Proceeds of the benefit, over and above expenses, go to the needy relief funds of the various settlements. John D. Allen and Henry Fowler were in charge of arrangements.

Young People Elect.

Young people of the Church are seeking information and knowledge about their religion as never before, Bishop Stewart told Gamma Kappa Delta, diocesan young people's society, at its annual meeting at Lawson Y. M. C. A., December 16. The Bishop urged the group to make the dissemination of information about the Church as one of its primary objects in 1936.

Francis Miller, Church of the Mediator, Morgan Park, was elected president of G. K. D., succeeding Leigh H. Hunt. Tribute was paid Mr. Hunt for his leadership during the past two years.

The young people's group of St. Elizabeth's Church, Chicago, won the honor shield of G. K. D., awarded each year for distinguished service.

Dr. Hopkins Never Grows Old.

Some clergy never grow old. The Rev. Dr. John Henry Hopkins, rector emeritus of Church of the Redeemer, Chicago, seems to be one of these. Although he retired five years ago and is now in his seventy-fifth year, Dr. Hopkins keeps busy. This is clearly evidenced by the fact that in February when the Rev. Dr. Vedeer Van Dyck, rector of St. Paul's Church, Burlington, Vt., is consecrated Bishop of Vermont, Dr. Hopkins will become locum tenens of the parish.

Dr. Hopkins' return to St. Paul's is unique. He was ordained and married in this church, and his grandfather, Bishop John Henry Hopkins, helped build the church.

Glen Ellyn Goes Ahead.

St. Mark's Church, Glen Ellyn, has done what many thought was impossible. In the recent Centenary campaign in the diocese, St. Mark's put on a thorough campaign and raised, proportionately, probably more than any other parish in the diocese. When the Every Member Canvass came along, many claimed the canvass would suffer as a result of the Centenary drive.

St. Mark's organized and prosecuted a thorough canvass in spite of this feeling, with the result that the amount pledged for 1936 is nine per cent over the amount pledged for 1935. The Rev. Gowan C. Williams, rector, attributes the results to thorough organization and the challenging of the people of the parish.

Honor Colored Actor.

Richard B. Harrison, the late colored actor who became famous for his portrayal of "De Lawd" in Green Pastures, has been memorialized in St. Edmund's Church (colored), Chicago, by the installation of a pipe organ to his memory. The organ was used for the first time at the midnight service Christmas Eve.

The organ is being given by Harrison's friends throughout the country, according to the Rev. Samuel J. Martin, rector. Mrs. Harrison, widow of the actor, and his son and daughter, Lawrence and Marion Harrison, were present when the organ was first used.

Mr. Harrison was presented for confirmation by Fr. Martin to Bishop Stewart more than a year before the actor's death. He had long been attending St. Edmund's and other Episcopal Churches.

Select Heroes of Church.

A new and unique program for the Church Schools of the diocese has been worked out by the Department of Religious Education. It includes the selection of modern "heroes" for the children in the work of the diocese itself.

Three of these "heroes" are present-day workers in the diocese—the Rev. A. E. Johnstone, member of the City Missions staff and chaplain of Lawrence Hall; Deaconess Helen M. Fuller, director of Chase House, and Deaconess Edith Adams, director of the Town and Country correspondence school work. The other two are: Sister Frances, founder of St. Mary's Home for Children, and Mrs. W. H. Benton, director of the Infant Class at St. Paul's Church, which was responsible for the founding of the House of Happiness.

These social service institutions are objects of the Advent Offering for the children. Another unusual feature of the Advent program is a special hymn, composed by Dr. Leo Sowerby, noted composer and organist at St. James' Church.

The Rev. W. M. Horstick Ministers at Death-bed of Bishop Weller.

In the passing recently of Bishop Weller of Fond du Lac, at Aurora, the Rev. Wm. Horstick played a rather unusual part. Fr. Horstick, who is rector of Trinity Church, Aurora, was called to Bishop Weller's side when it was evident the Bishop could not live. And to the Bishop who had ordained him to the sacred ministry, Fr. Horstick administered the last rites of the Church. Not often is a priest so young as Fr. Horstick permitted to perform such a function on the death of his Bishop.

Downers Grove Celebrates.

The days of cottage and store services were recalled when St. Andrew's Church, Downers Grove, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of her founding. A huge birthday cake, bearing fifty candles, symbolized the occasion and featured the parish reunion held on Sunday, December 1.

The Ven. W. H. Ziegler, archdeacon of Chicago, preached the anniversary sermon, while the Rev. Prof. Percy V. Norwood of Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, former pastor of St. Andrew's, preached at the festival service in the morning. A church school festival and young people's celebration were other features of the anniversary week.

First services in Downers Grove were held in private homes, in business houses and in school buildings. Then a little frame building in what was called East Grove provided the place of worship. The Rev. Wm. Livermore of Grace Church, Hinsdale, conducted the services in the early days.

SOUTHERN OHIO.

Rt. Rev. Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Bishop.

Campaign for Children's Hospital Goes Over the Top.

A campaign to raise $120,000 to maintain the Children's Hospital, Cincinnati, the finest service center in the world for sick children, and invaluable because of its research and clinical promotion, has "gone over the top".

Team captains, workers and other friends gathered December 17 at the Queen City Club for the report on the campaign, which opened December 3.

Following announcement by A. E. Anderson, chairman of the board of trustees of the success of the drive, the entire assembly, led by Bishop Hobson, sang the doxology.

The hospital will be able to continue at maximum capacity for the coming year its work for needy children, now 72 per cent of its entire hospital service.

Rev. S. H. Lindsay Appointed Editor of the Messenger.

In order to relieve Canon Gilbert P. Symons of some of his duties, Bishop Hobson has appointed the Rev. Smythe H. Lindsay as editor of the Messenger, diocesan publication for Southern Ohio.

Demands of the Forward Movement and the diocese on Canon Symons' time have become exacting. He is the chairman of the Forward Movement Committee on the manual, "Forward—Day by Day", and is responsible for the editing and publishing of each number.

Mr. Lindsay, a member of the Forward Movement Commission staff, also is on Bishop Hobson's diocesan staff.

The Southern Ohio Diocesan Convention will be held at the Church of the Advent, Cincinnati, January 21 and 22.

Woman's Auxiliary Elects New Officers.

Miss Elizabeth Matthews, of Glendale, nationally known Churchwoman, was elected president of the Southern Ohio Woman's Auxiliary for the triennium of 1936-38 at the recent diocesan convention at Christ Church, Cincinnati.

Vice-presidents are: Mrs. Walter W. Tangeman, Hyde Park, Cincinnati Convocation; Miss Louise McCune, Columbus, Columbus Convocation; Mrs. A. F. Burdoin, Dayton, Dayton Convocation.

Miss Judith Braxton Colston, Mt. Auburn, Cincinnati, is secretary. Mrs. Edward Wagner, Clifton, Cincinnati, is treasurer, and Mrs. Roger Kemper Rogan, Glendale, is United Thank Offering treasurer. Mrs. Lucille Hickenlooper, Hyde Park, Cincinnati, is secretary for the supply department. Mrs. Chalmers Hadley, Cincinnati, is chairman of the educational committee and custodian of the Book of Remembrance. Miss Emily Aldrich, Cincinnati, is field secretary in the department of Religious Education.

Miss Mary E. Johnston, Glendale, is a member of the national executive board.

Conferences of Woman's Auxiliary officers will be held January 9 in Cincinnati, January 10 in Columbus, and January 15 in Dayton.

S. H. Lindsay.

LEXINGTON

Rt. Rev. H. P. A. Abbott, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Abbott Meets With Mountain Clergy in Annual Conference.

The first annual conference of the mountain clergy of the diocese met in St. John's Church, Corbin, November 15, under the leadership of the Ven. Gerald H. Catlin, Jr., archdeacon of the Mountain Missions. Bishop Almon Abbott attended, and inspired and encouraged the men. Consideration was given to the special problems arising out of the combination of rural and industrial life found in the field. The need for spreading the information about their work throughout the diocese was felt by those attending, and plans were made for a publicity program. In addition to those mentioned, the following attended: the Rev. Messrs. Claudius F. Smith, Middlesboro; Llewellyn B. Catlin, Pikeville; Frederick J. Drew, Beattyville, and Richard C. Patton, Corbin. The next meeting will be in the fall of 1936, at Beattyville.

Central Plan Adopted.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Church of the Ascension, Frankfort, has adopted the "central" plan, whereby all women are divided into six circles or chapters, including one for the business women. A central organization provides unity.

NEBRASKA.

Rt. Rev. Ernest V. Shayler, D. D., Bishop.

A Working Vestry.

Lady members of the vestry of St. Luke's, Plattsmouth, assisted by a chosen few from the organizations, made 524 quarts of mincemeat which was sold as their contribution toward the funds of the church.

Anniversary Dinner.

The fiftieth anniversary dinner of All Saints Church, Omaha, turned into a spontaneous ovation to Judge William A. Redick, senior warden of the church, diocesan chancellor and member of the original vestry organized half a century ago. One hundred and seventy-five members of the parish paid their respects to the veteran layman as they listened to speeches and descriptions of the early life of the church. Dr. Frederick Clayton, rector, presented Judge Redick with an engraved golden cross, which represented, he said, the esteem in which the recipient was held by all the parish. Mr. A. A. Lowman presided and Bishop Shayler gave an address at the close, summing up the work which had been done and pronouncing the benediction.

Members of Trinity Guild and Auxiliary served a candlelight dinner recently in the parish house. A cabaret program was presented by a younger group.

* * *

Slight damage to the roof of Clarkson Memorial Hospital Nurses' Home, Omaha, was done recently when a fire was discovered. The blaze, happily, was rapidly extinguished. The cause of the fire is not known.

Anniversary Observed.

The seventieth anniversary of St. James' Church, Fremont, was fittingly observed in November. The Right Rev. Harry T. Moore, Bishop of Dallas, was the guest of honor. He was rector of the parish some years ago. The services opened with the celebration of Holy Communion, at which the Right Rev. Bishop E. V. Shayler acted as celebrant, with Bishop Moore preaching the sermon. Rev. J. Walker, rector, and Rev. William J. H. Petter, of Plattsmouth, assisted. Bishop Moore preached on the text, "God is not the God of the dead but of the living". He emphasized the Church as being the sphere of Divine influence and the society through whom the Spirit of God works in the world. After luncheon Mrs. W. W. Hoagland and officers of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary brought greetings to a large number of women of the district. The evening dinner meeting was slightly less well attended by those from a distance owing to a sleet storm and almost impassable highways. The special speakers were Dr. Fred Clayton, of All Saints', Omaha, and Mr. R. D. Neely, an Omaha lawyer, and the chairman of the Diocesan Field Department. The afternoon and evening sessions were held in the newly build parish house.

OHIO.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Rogers, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Remington Guest of the Diocese: Field Department Conducting Active Campaign.

The Rt. Rev. William P. Remington, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Eastern Oregon, was a guest of the Field Department of the diocese recently.

Bishop Remington addressed nine Regional Mass Meetings at important centers, in behalf of the Church's program and with part reference to his work in Eastern Oregon.

He also addressed five Regional meetings of the Woman's Auxiliary and preached in four important parishes.

Bishop Rogers, accompanied Bishop Remington and spoke on the program of the diocese.

The Diocese of Ohio is engaging in a campaign to accomplish three aims in 1936. First, to increase Parish giving to restore clergy salaries to an adequate level and to restore Parish activity that has been curtailed because of lack of funds; second, to increase giving to the Church's program to permit a 50-50 division of missionary funds to the General Church on the partnership principal; third, cooperation with the Forward Movement to increase spiritual power of the whole Church.

The campaign is conducted under the auspices of the Field Department, of which the Rev. Walter F. Tunks, D. D., is chairman, and Mr. Clifford C. Cowin is Secretary.

An attractive pamphlet entitled, "The Diocese of Ohio Must Advance With the Whole Church," has been distributed to all communicants.

DEATHS

ELIZA CHEW AMBLER BLACKFORD.

Entered into Life Eternal, in her seventy-ninth year, at her home at the University, on November 19th, ELIZA CHEW AMBLER BLACKFORD, widow of the late Dr. L. M. Blackford, for forty-three years Principal of the Episcopal High School at Alexandria.

Mrs. Blackford was the daughter of the Rev. John Ambler and Anna Mason Ambler, and a granddaughter of the Hon. James Murray Mason. Her entire life was spent in Virginia, except a few years following the War Between the States, when she was with Senator Mason during his exile in Canada. After her husband's death in 1914, Mrs. Blackford moved her residence to Charlottesville so as to be with her aunt, Miss Virginia Mason; and to complete the education of her two youngest sons at the University.

Five sons survive her: Dr. John Minor Blackford, of Seattle, Wash.; Rev. Ambler Mason Blackford, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Rev. Randolph Fairfax Blackford, of Leesburg, Fla.; Dr. Launcelot M. Blackford, of Atlanta, Ga.; and Dr. Staige Davis Blackford, of the University of Virginia.

In the passing of Mrs. Blackford to her "home not made with hands", though many are conscious of a deep sense of bereavement, there can be none among those who loved her who are not sharing in her final spiritual triumph. Hers was one of the great souls whose ascension sheds a special benediction on those they leave.

Having known her well since childhood, I can never think of Mrs. Blackford except as one who was forever giving—of herself, her sympathy and her worldly possessions. The only person she failed to consider in her daily life was herself.

There are old Episcopal High School boys in all parts of the country who will never forget how she nursed them when physically ill and comforted them when, as new boys, they were assailed by homesickness. Children were always drawn to this lover of childhood, recognizing a sympathetic spirit whose fund of enchanting stories was inexhaustible. Unfailingly considerate and generous to her servants, which is the acid test of kindness, they adored this ever-responsive friend who made their problems her own.

Never were those words "It is more blessed to give than to receive" more clearly demonstrated than in Mrs. Blackfords' life.

Though so physically handicapped in her latter years that she could seldom leave her front porch, and in spite of the fact that her eyesight had almost completely failed, it has rarely been my privilege to see a more ineffably lovely spirit transcend the limitations of the body. During her last days she was continually enumerating her many blessings, and never once referred to what most people would consider her afflictions. "I have all that I could ask for in this life," she would often say to visitors, "and everything to look forward to in the next."

One who knew her well referred to these latter years of Mrs. Blackford's life as "the supreme achievement of spiritual development".

Having lived to make others happy, her reward was an abiding faith and joy that nothing could take from her. May the radiance of her spirit, as it travels on, continue to light the way for those she left still in their pilgrimage.

Annual Service of Masons at Cathedral.

The Rt. Rev. James M. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington, was the special preacher in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on Sunday morning, December 1.

At the evening service that day the annual service for Royal Arch Masons of Wayne County was held. This year the Ark and Thomas Peters Chapters of Windsor, and the Grand Capter of Ontario, were invited to participate in the service, and several hundred Royal Arch Masons in full regalia formed an imposing procession into the Cathedral for the service. The main parts of the service were all in charge of members of the Royal Craft. The Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of the Cathedral, conducted the service and preached. The Rev. Bates G. Burt, rector of All Saints' Church, Pontiac, and Grand Chaplain, read the Lesson. The music was under the direction of Francis R. Mackay, organist and master of the choristers. Charles Gillet acted as marshal.

Resignation.

The Rev. Clarence Parker, rector of Christ Church, Adrian, since 1930, resigned the parish on December 1.

Bishop Page and Mr. Charles O. Ford, Executive Secretary, visited the Parish on Friday evening, November 29, and inaugurated the fall Every Member Canvass. Both made addresses to the group present at the dinner meeting.

Training School for Lay Readers Well Attended.

The seventh annual Training School for Lay Readers, held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, for five consecutive Thursday evenings under the direction of the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the diocese, closed with a banquet for the members of the school, at St. Andrew's Church, Detroit, on the evening of Monday, November 25. About thirty-five laymen have been enrolled in this year's school, which was conducted by Archdeacon Hagger with the assistance of Edward C. Douglas, Musical Director of St. Andrew's Church. A part of this number has representative Lay Readers now licensed to officiate in various Mission stations under the Archdeacon's direction, and in various parishes under the direction of their own clergy; other enrollemtns have been those of laymen desiring to take up the work of Lay Reading.

The speaker at the service following the banquet on November 25, was Bishop Page, whose subject was "Vitalizing Christianity."

Rt. Rev. James De Wolf Perry, D. D., Bishop.

Rt. Rev. G. G. Bennett, D. D., Assistant.

Archbishop and Mrs. Temple Guests of Bishop and Mrs. Perry Over Christmas.

The diocese and the State have been awaiting the coming of the Archbishop of York with special reasons for the expectancy. In the first place, Bishop Perry, as Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church, invited the Archbishop to come to this country, and he and Mrs. Temple were entertained by Bishop and Mrs. Perry over Christmas. His Grace met the clergy of the diocese at breakfast on Tuesday morning, December 24, in the Guild House of St. Stephen's Church, Providence, immediately after a service of Holy Communion, which the Archbishop celebrated. And on Chrismas morning he preached in Grace Church, situated in the heart of the city and noted for its hospitality to all sorts and conditions of wandering worshippers. The Archbishop has now been long enough in this country to stimulate public interest in his views on social justice, peace and international relations.

The Archbishop was the celebrant at Holy Communion on Christmas Eve at midnight at the Cathedral of St. John in Providence. On Monday night the Archbishop and Mrs. Temple were entertained at a dinner of twenty guests by Mr. and Mrs. E. Bruce Merriman.

Fifty-two Missions Planned for the Diocesanwide Mission.

The Rev. Anthony R. Parshley, rector of St. Michael's Church, Bristol, for the Committee on the Diocesanwide Mission to be held here February 2-14, has released for the newspapers the first official statement in connection with that movement. For four months the committee has been meeting once a week, and the release is a summary of what has been done in that time.

Fifty-two missions have been planned in as many parishes and missions. In some parishes a children's mission will be held in the afternoon. Prayer groups and calling groups have been organized to stimulate parochial interest. A committtee of seventy laymen under the leadership of Albert E. Thornley, of Pawtucket, is at work for similar ends in the diocese. A special hymnal is being prepared by Bishop Bennett. Careful instructions have been drawn up by the main committee and sent to all the clergy.

The final paragraph of the release reads:

"This movement is the most intensive of any ever undertaken by any diocese of the Episcopal Church. There have been simultaneous missions held by the parishes in cities and others held by the principal churches in dioceses, but nothing of this nature has ever been attempted before, and the expectancy of the Church is being aroused very rapidly."

MISSOURI

Rt. Rev. William Scarlett, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Cross, of Spokane, was in St. Louis, Sunday, November 24, and spoke at three churches on the Forward Movement. He spoke at Christ Church Cathedral in the morning, at St. Peter's in the afternoon and at St. Michael's and St. George's Church Sunday night, the night service at the last named church being a large Dioecsan meeting with all clergy in attendance and Bishop Scarlett presiding. Dr. Karl Morgan Block, rector of St. Michel's and St George's, is a member of the committee on the Forward Movement, and recently spoke at a rally held at Trinity Cathedral, Little Rock, Ark., in this connection.

T. Carter Johnson.

Personal Notes

Dr. John W. Wood entered the New York Hospital on December 17 for a period of rest and recuperation from ill health brought on in part by the long strain of supervising the Church's foreign missionary work in these recent difficult years. He is under the care of his brother, Wilson Wood, M. D., and is to avoid official responsibilities for another month.

Clerical Changes.

The Rev. Louis L. Perkins, for the past nine years rector of St. Paul's Church, Kittanning, Pa., has resigned to accept a call to the rectorship of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Shelton, Connecticut. Mr. Perkins will begin his new work January 15. During his rectorship at St. Paul's, Mr. Perkins has added many improvements and been actively interested in the missionary work in that section of the diocese. He has served on numerous diocesan committees.

Ordinations.

Priest.

The Rev. Harris J. Mowry, Jr., and the Rev. Henry P. Krusen were advanced to the priesthood by Bishop McCormick, of Western Michigan in St. Luke's Church, Kalamazoo, Mich., on December 18. The ordinands were presented by the Rev. A. Gordon Fowkes, rector of St. Luke's, and the Rev. Dr. James E. Wilkinson preached the sermon. The service was followed by a luncheon in the Parish House. About fifteen of the clergy of the diocese were present in the chancel.

The Rev. Mr. Mowry becomes rector of St. James' Church, Albion, and the Rev. Mr. Krusen rector of Holy Trinity Church, Manistoe.

Ordinations.

The Rev. Robert Longacre Jacoby was ordained to the priesthood in the Church of St. James the Less, Falls of Schuylkill, by the Rt. Rev. Francis M. Taitt, Bishop of Pennsylvania, acting for the Bishop of Washington, at a special service.

Mr. Jacoby, who is a Philadelphian, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and widely known in musical circles in this city, has been serving his diaconate on the clergy staff of St. Stephen's Church, one of the largest parishes of the Church in the national capital. During his student days at the University he was associated with the Rev. "Jack" Hart, at that time in charge of the Episcopal Church student work at the University, and he entered the ministry from St. James the Less.

The Rev. Dr. George F. Dudley, rector of the Washington parish in which Mr. Jacoby is serving, came to Philadelphia by appointment of Bishop Freeman and preached the ordination sermon. The Rev. Charles Jarvis Harriman, rector of St. James the Less, was Mr. Jacoby's presenter, and the Rev. James M. Niblo, rector of St. John's, Norristown, and Canon Residentiary of the Cathedral Church of Christ, Upper Roxborough, was master of ceremonies.

THOUGHTS for the THOUGHTFUL

Each day is an opportunity to start all over again—to cleanse our minds and hearts anew, and to clarify our vision. Let us not clutter up today with the leavings of other days.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"It should be a point of honor to us," says Dean Inge in his little book, "The Gate of Life", "that the world shall be somehow a gainer by our sojourn in it."

God's justice and love are one. Infinite justice must be infinite love. Justice is but another sign of love.—F. W. Robertson.

Thou, Thou art conqueror and Lord of all,
And I in Thee have found the soul's renewing.
Thy grace is mine, Thy strength is at my call,
And Thy reward but only waits the doing.
—Robt. MacGowan.

It is right to be happy. There is joy in Heaven, and Jesus began His ministry on earth by indicating the way to blessedness. It is right to be happy, and it is imperative to be good. We do not believe that the conduct God requires can issue in unhappiness.—Rev. T. E. Gouwens.

The Church of Christ will be incomplete as long as the representatives of any people, nation, or tongue are outside its pale.

Great old Sir Walter Scott said: "There never did and never will exist anything permanently noble and excellent in character which was a stranger to the exercise of resolute self-denial."

"When we look down, our shoulders stoop. When we look down in our thouhts our character stoops. It is only when we look up that the body becomes erect. It is only when our thoughts look up that our life becomes erect. Let us seek those things which are above.

"Open our eyes to see Thee as Thou art: help us so to know Thee that we may love Thee: so to love Thee that we may grow more like Thee: so to follow Thee that through us others may know Thee and find in Thee their hope, their life, their joy."

To recognize with delight all high and generous and beautiful actions; to find a joy even in seeing the good qualities of your bitterest opponents, and to admire those qualities even in those with whom you have least sympathy—this is the only spirit which can heal the love of slander and of calumny.—E. W. Robertson.

Not only by blue Galilee
Did He the leper cleanse, the dead
Raise unto life, and on all hearts
That mourned, His matchless glory shed;
Today He speaks, in homes of men,
To heal each spirit sick with sin,
And at the door of every life
He stands and seeks to enter in.

We cannot deny or ignore the hard experiences of life—they must come to all of us—but they will be softened wonderfully if we carry in our hearts the sure conviction that God lives and cares.

Some Important Facts in English Church History

EXAMINED AND REVIEWED
By
REV. W. P. WITSELL, D. D.

This is an illuminating and instructive review of the history of the Episcopal Church in England from the earliest records, with commentaries on the book with the above title compiled by the Rev. C. L. Wells, D. D., of Sewanee, Tenn.

As a digest of the records of the establishment and growth of the Church; its maintenance and continuity of existence as an independent religious body amid the vicissitudes of early English politics, and efforts of outside interference, this review affords a valuable fund of information to churchmen.
